FRANK H. FRANCIS SHOT AND KILLED BY YOUNG COMPANION ON SUNDAY

GUN IN HANDS OF FOURTEEN YEAR OLD EUGENE RICH ACCIDENTALLY DISCHARGED.

DEATH INSTANTANEOUS

Boys Were Hunting on Prairie Three Miles East of City When Fatal Accident Happened.

On Sunday afternoon occurred the first hunting fatality of the season in the vicinity of Janesville, when Frank H. Francis, aged twenty-five, was shot and instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of Eugene Rich, aged fourteen. The entire charge in a heavy shell tore through the head of Francis, making a wicked hole, and scattering his brains, death being instantaneous, Francis dropping back without a moan.

Francis lived with his father at No. 5 Harrison street and has recently been employed in the construction of the Milwaukee street bridge. Eugene Rich is the son of Mrs. Jacob Stern, 717 Court street. The two had left the city shortly after one o'clock on a hunting trip. They had proceeded out Ruger avenue and finding game scarce had amused themselves by shooting at fence posts, corn shocks and other inanimate objects.

Reaching the Charles Hubel farm, three miles from the city, they sat down in the corn field, Francis being on one side of a corn shock and Rich on the other. A flock of geese made their appearance and Francis, without rising from his seat, fired one shot at them from the single barrel gun he was carrying. Young Rich also took a shot and in throwing open the breech of his gun, a cheap affair, to place a heavier-loaded shell in, evidently snapped the trigger and the whole charge passed through Francis' head.

Horror-stricken at the result of his carelessness, young Rich started across the fields towards the nearest house to summon aid. No one being home the youth dashed down the road toward the Godfrey farm, where he saw an automobile standing. When he arrived there he was in such a state of terror he could not intelligently make known his errand for some minutes, the men believing he had been injured himself. He managed, however, to tell of the fatal accident and the men hastened back to the field to find Francis lying just as he fell back.

Mr. Godfrey immediately notified Sheriff Whipple and District Attorney Dunwiddie and came to the city for them in his auto. The officers went to the scene of the accident, young Rich, who had somewhat regained his composure, accompanying them and being able to tell a coherent story of the accident.

Convinced it was an unavoidable accident due to carelessness in handling the weapon, or to defect in the weapon itself, young Rich was not held and the district attorney decided no inquest was necessary. The boy was brought to the city almost in a state of collapse after his experience and taken to the home of his mother.

From the position of Francis' body and the footprints in the soft soil, young Rich's story that Francis was sitting down when killed, and he was but five feet from him, were clearly proven. In loading his gun he had pointed it carelessly toward Francis and the safety pin failing to catch, the shell was exploded with fatal results.

One of the hardest tasks of the sheriff and district attorney was notifying Francis' aged parent of his son's death. The elder Francis is almost helpless from paralysis and his son was his sole support. The aged man listened with horror-stricken eyes to the story of his son's death and then broke down completely, his condition being most pitiful. The remains of Francis were brought to the city and taken to Nelson's morgue.

Aside from his father, Charles Francis, the deceased leaves to mourn his loss two sisters, Mrs. Elsie Blemish of St. Louis, and Mrs. Pearl Dickenson of Rockford, and an uncle, F. H. Francis, who resides on Milwaukee avenue adjoining the Charles Francis home.

TO HOLD IMPORTANT ELECTIONS IN OHIO

Voters of State to Pass Judgment on Several Proposed Amendments to Constitution.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Columbus, O., Nov. 3.—Nearly all of the leading cities of Ohio will hold municipal elections tomorrow, and in addition the voters of the entire state will be given opportunity to pass judgment on several proposed amendments to the state constitution. Most public interest is manifested in the initiative vote to be taken on a bill to prohibit the shipment of liquor into dry territory. An amendment for a small legislature and another to exempt public bonds from taxation are submitted to the voters, also an amendment to shorten the election ballots, as advocated a year ago by all three political parties. The last-named amandment would make the governor and lieutenant governor the only elective state officers, and would give the legislature the power to pass laws conferring home rule on counties.

BATTLE OF TALLASEHATCHEE FOUGHT A CENTURY AGO

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Anniston, Ala., Nov. 3.—One hundred years ago today the battle of Tallasehatchee, one of the bloodiest conflicts of the Creek Indian war, was fought near the site of the present town of Alexandria, northwest of this city. A force of Tennessee mounted gunmen, in command of General Coffee, surprised a large party of Creek Indians in their camp and almost annihilated them. Only five of the attacking party were killed. The centennial anniversary was observed today under the auspices of the Alabama D. A. R. which has also launched a movement to erect a monument to commemorate the battle.

REPUBLIC OF PANAMA IS TEN YEARS OF AGE

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Panama, Nov. 3.—The Republic of Panama today began celebrations in honor of the tenth anniversary of its independence from Colombia. With the water already turned into Culebra Cut and the final completion of the great canal in sight, the celebration will be carried through the entire week and is expected to be more brilliant than in any previous year. Today was observed as a public holiday by all classes. Crowds of Americans joined in the festivities with as much enthusiasm as was displayed by the native residents of the republic.

COUNSEL PRESENTS CLOSING ARGUMENTS IN HARVESTER SUIT

Struggle to Dissolve International Harvester Company Begins in Federal Court at St. Paul.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

St. Paul, Nov. 3.—Opposing counsel entered the United States district court here this morning for the final struggle in the government suit to dissolve the International Harvester Company as a monopoly in violation of the Sherman law. Members of the court gathered to hear final arguments in the case filed more than a year ago.

According to announcement made this morning after the certificate and report of Special Examiner Robert S. Taylor, had been returned to the court, counsel for the government will occupy the entire day and possibly a portion of tommrrow's session in the presentation of arguments. It was indicated that the brief and argument of the defense might taken even longer.

Attorney General James C. McReynolds, Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to the attorney general, and Joseph R. Darling, special agent of the department of justice, were in the city to represent the government.

The Harvester Company had on hand a formidable array of counsel, including Judge William D. McHugh of Omaha, Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, Edgar A. Bancroft, John P. Wilson, Phillip A. Post, Victor A. Reny and W. M. Stillwell, the last five being from Chicago.

BOULDER ON TRACK CAUSES BAD WRECK

C. B. & Q. Train Derailed Near Genoa, Wis., and Several Persons Badly Hurt.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

La Crosse, Nov. 3.—Passenger train No. 58 on the C. B. & Q. railroad, which left here at 11 o'clock last night, was wrecked near Genoa, Wis., at 12:12 this morning when the locomotive struck a boulder half the size of a box car which had been dislodged by recent rains and rolled down the bluff onto the track.

Engineer James M. Pratt, La Crosse, was possibly fatally injured. His jaw was broken and one side of his face crushed in. Four Italian track laborers and one negro porter were also injured, not fatally, and are being cared for at Genoa by physicians who went down on the wrecking train.

First reports of the accident received here were that the wrecked train was the Oriental limited, the coast train which runs a little behind No. 58. The coast train, however, was not harmed and met no handicaps other than several hours delay. No. 58 is also a first class train and faster than the Oriental limited.

SIX DAY BIKE RACE IS BEGUN IN BOSTON

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—The first six-day bicycle race of the season was inaugurated in the Boston Arena this afternoon, when ten of the best balanced teams ever entered in a similar contest in this section began the grind that will continue ten hours a day until Saturday night. All of the contestants are veterans of the six-day racing game. The Australian contingent is an unusually large one, including Jackie Clarke, Paddy Hehir and half a dozen others. Among the well known American riders who will strive to bring home the bacon are Champion Joe Fogler, Eddie Root, Jimmy Moran, Ivor Lawson, Fred Hill and Elmer Collins.

FIND MAGGIE KNIGHT IN ABANDONED SHED ON FARM NEAR CITY

FOOTVILLE WOMAN REMAINS UNCONSCIOUS FOR FIVE DAYS IN DESERTED OUTBUILDING.

CERTAIN OF RECOVERY

Physicians Confident She Will Live in Spite of Exposure to Cold Without Food or Drink.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Footville, Nov. 3.—The condition of Maggie Knight, who was found late Saturday afternoon in an abandoned shed on the Joseph Fisher farm on the Hanover road, three miles south of Janesville, is reported much improved today in spite of the terrible exposure, and physicians say that she will probably be able to be up in several days.

For five days the woman remained in a deserted corncrib and according to her own story was unconscious during the entire time. She wore but a light calico dress and summer-weight underwear. She had only the cold, damp ground for a bed and nothing for covering. That she lived to tell the experience is remarkable and is due, no doubt, in part, to her unsound mental condition.

The Knight woman was found by Corrine Acheson and Merle Brown, two small girls, the former being the daughter of Robert Acheson, who resides on the Fisher farm. They were attracted by the woman's cries when she recovered consciousness and at once summoned aid. In a pitable plight, lips and face swollen and purple from exposure to cold and lack of water, the sick woman was taken to the Acheson home where she was later identified by Patrick Conway, a former Footville man, who lives at the home of Michael Finley.

The relatives at Footville were at once notified and medical aid was summoned. John Fox drove out from Footville in his car accompanied by Mrs. Art. Jones and Miss Mamie Knight, a sister. Although it was feared Saturday night that the woman would not live, it was thought best to remove here to her home at Footville. She was unconscious soon after she was taken to the Acheson home until Sunday.

Her mind apparently clear, Miss Knight was able to tell her experience in a sane and collected manner today. "You know I am subject to these spells," she told her mother, Mrs. Kate Knight, in explanation of her disappearance.

The Fisher farm is some six or seven miles from Footville. The girl left home last Monday about supper time and wandered through the rain and darkness until she came to this deserted corncrib, which stands some distance from the other buildings on the Fisher place. She told today of seeking shelter in this old shed. Her clothes were soaking wet, she said, and she was tired. She took off her shoes and stockings and wrung the water out of her clothing, which is the last she remembers until she regained consciousness on Saturday. She was very thirsty and called out to the two girls to bring her a drink of water. She remembered nothing after she was taken to the Acheson home.

That the woman could remain for nearly a week in the building without discovery, is accounted for by the fact that the shed in which she took refuge is an old one, practically never used. It stands near the road but the door had been closed so that persons passing on the highway did not discover the fact that the shed held an occupant.

Searching parties had been hunting the entire western part of the county all week for the missing girl and her mother and other relatives were nearly frantic. Her mental condition has been unsound for some time past and only last summer she was brought home from the county asylum, her relatives wishing to take care of her themselves. It is probable she will be taken back after her recovery from her recent experience, as her care is too great a strain for her mother.

She was suffering with a high fever today, which the physicians stated was nothing alarming. She had no desire for food but has taken nourishment quite frequently, so that her condition, though serious, is not critical.

BRITISH SHIPOWNERS READY FOR OPENING OF GREAT WATERWAY

All Large Steamship Companies Have Either Added to Their Tonnage or Prepared to Do So.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

London, Nov 1.—British shipowners and merchants, in every line of produce and manufacture, have carefully laid plans for any change that will come over the trade of the world as a result of the opening of the Panama Canal.

All the big shipping companies that have interests in the countries directly benefited by the new waterway have either added to their tonnage or made preparations for doing so, and in every case it will be found that the steamers built or building are generally of the size considered most suitable for the transit of the canal. Coaling stations also are being arranged for in order that steamers using the canal may coal, if necessary, between Colon and England, and generally speaking, everything possible is being done to enable England to hold the supremacy she has attained in the world's maritime trade.

Englishmen, however, always conservative, do not believe that the revolution will be an immediate one. They are planning for a gradual expansion of trade which the ships now in existence or in prospect will be quite able to take care of. Probably one of the best authorities on this question is Major E. R. Jones, formrely American Consul at Cardiff, who for many years has been editor of "Shipping World." In a recent interview Major Jones said:

"Several of our leading British shipowners trading with the Central American states on the Pacific have built and are building ships to meet the business which the Panama route is expected to create especially between the Atlantic and Pacific. In doing this they have ignored the possibility of the granting of preferential canal tolls to American coasting tonnage using the canal. They frankly believe that the United States will never carry out this idea. Should they be right, and the tonnage ready to use the canal the first year be 10,500,000 tons and the tolls $1.25 a ton, the income will be suffifficient to meet the interest charges and working expenses. Should the American coastting tonnage, however, be exempt from tolls the whole of the interest and working expenses will fall upon foreign, principally British, shipowners, and this of course would place them at a disadvantage.

"The dominating factors governing the traffic of the Panama Canal will be distances and expense; that is to say, tolls and dues, and consideration of these will often turn the scale in favor of either the Suez or the Panama route. As I have already indicated, the Panama tolls are to be $1.25 per ton. The Suez dues on ships with cargo are 6.25 francs ($1.25) at present, but ships in ballast are allowed a rebate of 2.50 francs (50) cents per ton "on full transit rate." Particulars as to charges and navigation rules for the Panama Canal are not yet published; therefore comparisons are not possible. But as far as they are known they are in favor of the Suez canal. It should be rememebered also that as the profits increase the tonnage charges are reduced by the Suez. Whether this policy may be practicable after the opening of the Panama Canal, when a good deal of tonnage may be withdrawn from the Suez waterway, remains to be seen.

"Should the proposed immunity of American coasting tonnage from canal tolls be maintained and I do not think it will, then the Suez route will always get the benefit of the doubt in respect of cost and distance. This will apply to all Asiatic ports west of Japan; practically all Australian ports and Manila, yes, and many ports of New Zealand and Japan where the distance only slightly favors Panama.

"It goes without saying that, as a general proposition, the benefits of the Panama route will be greatest for the countries and centres where the distance saved is the most. It follows therefore that the American continent; Canada, the United States, Mexico, the states of Central and South America, on both oceans, and the West India Islands, will be the greatest beneficiaries.

"Of course nothing but good can come to the manufacturers and consumers of the British Isles from the abundant success of the Panama Canal. Our exports to the markets fed and favored by the canal are manufacturers; the return cargo is food supplies and raw material, so both classes will benefit. It will mean, too, a multiplication of British coaling stations, which already dot the oceans of the world, so that the mines and mine owners also will get their share of the benfits. It is said that the American government purposes an arrangement for supplying good American coal at each end of the canal at 19 shillings ($4.75) a ton. President Wilson will not in my opinion, go beyond providing coal for American warships. And although Pocahontas coal is very good, its heat value is inferior to the steam coal of South Wales and Northumberland. Then of course there is the oil which British companies are drawing in Mexico, and are arranging to exploit Central America.

"In every sense, commercial and sentimental, it is highly desirable that the formal, official inauguration of the canal, an achievement only second to Lincoln's emancipation of the slaves, should take place in the spirit of friendliness and good will on the part of all maritime nations."

BIG MILITARY TOURNAMENT OPENED AT NEW YORK

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

New York, Nov. 3.—With clattering side arms and the rattle of steel-shod hoofs, the advance guard of the Military Tournament took possession of Madison Square Garden this morning, and with the readiness of tried campaigners, converted the big amphitheatre into a military encampment, and were in comfortable quarters in less than an hour. It is several years since a military show has been held in New York and the present exhibition, which will last all week, will include a number of new and interesting features. The new calcium shells for lighting up an enemy's advance at night will be demonstrated from the Garden roof, where a landing stage also has been built for the convenience of the army airmen who are to carry messages to and from the tournament, Governor's Island, Fort Hamilton, and other fortified places around New York.

ELECTION OUTCOME BAY STATE DUBIOUS

Seven Candidates Contesting for Governorship—Governor Eugene Foss Runs Independent.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—A large question mark smybolizes the political situation in Massachusetts at the close of the annual state campaign today, and the answer of the voters to the inquiry who will be governor, which is to be decided at the election tomorrow, is awaited with an interest surpassing that felt in the Bay State in a long time.

Seven candidates are contesting for the governorship. Governor Eugene N. Foss, now finishing his third term, is seeking re-election as an independent candidate. The Republican nominee is Congressman Augustus P. Gardner, well remembered as one of the leaders of the insurgent movement against Speaker Cannon. The Democratic standard-bearer is David I. Walsh, the present lieutenant governor. Charles S. Bird, a millionaire of Walpole, who heads the Progressive ticket, completes the list of those in the running. The Prohibition, Socialist and Socialist Labor parties have named candidates, but they are not expected to figure conspicuously in the results.

The six parties have candidates for all state offices, but the Democratic and Republican parties are the only ones that have candidates in all the senate and representative districts. In some of the representative districts the Progressives have indorsed the Democratic candidates.

The independent candidacy of Governor Foss, who filed his nomination papers only an hour before the legal time limit expired, complicated the situation to such an extent as to render all forecasts of the election results little better than guesswork.

With the Republican party split, Walsh, the Democratic candidate, was generally picked as an easy winner before Foss got into the race. But it is difficult for disinterested observers to escape the conclusion that a man who has been three times elected governor by the Democratic party and who runs as an independent because he had a falling out with the party "machine," among other reasons, will not draw a large number of Democratic votes from the regular nominee of that party. It is considered likely, moreover, that many business men irrespective of party will vote for Foss because of his challenge by word and deed to organized labor.

The possibility of Foss cutting into the Democratic vote has given courage to Gardner and Bird, the Republican and Progressive candidates, respectively.

The campaign has been conducted almost wholly on the state issues. At the same time the election is of national interest, chiefly because the future of the Republican and Progressive parties must be tremendously affected by the results.

With former President Roosevelt far away from the country the ability of the Progressive party to stand alone is put to its severest test. A good showing at the polls will augur well for the future of the new party. On the other hand, a marked falling off in the Progressive vote will be interpreted far and wide as evidence of the temporary character of the third party and will have an important bearing on the situation involving the congressional campaign of next year, not to speak of the presidential contest in 1916. With a full realization of the importance of the campaign in this respect, both the Republicans and the Progressives have brought their leaders of national prominence into the contest.

If the Democrats win under the circumstances it will not be a matter of tremendous import, for the Democrats have been electing their gubernatorial ticket with considerable regularity for some years past, rock-ribbed as the Old Bay State has been supposed to be in its Republicanism.

In view of the fact that Mr. Walsh is not committed to an indorsement of President Wilson, his victory could not, therefore, be regarded as a vote of confidence for the administration, and if he is defeated the administration leaders would immediateiy put out the statement that the defeat of Walsh was in no nsense a rebuke for the president, because national issues were not involved, but rather that it was a rebuke of the Democratic ring for refusing to indorse President Wilson.

GRIMM TO SENTENCE JOSEPH PERRUCCIO, TWO O'CLOCK TODAY

Law Provides One to Eight Years in State's Prison for Assault of Which Beloit Italian Was Convicted.

Joseph Perruccio, found guilty by the jury in the circuit court late Saturday afternoon on the charge of assault "in a manner evincing a depraved mind regardless of human life," will be sentenced at two o'clock this afternoon by Judge George Grimm. The law provides a penalty of from one to eight years for this offense. Perruccio was acquitted of the charge of murder, his conviction being for the attack on Tony Dragona. It took the jury nearly twenty-eight hours to arrive at a verdict.

Perruccio awaited the verdict with some anxiety. He was concerned lest the outcome would be a disagreement and in the court room Saturday afternoon seemed much distressed when it seemed almost inevitable that his case must be tried again.

Perruccio calmly discussed his case at his cell in the county jail on Sunday. He was disappointed, ht said, at the jury's verdict. "I am sorry," he continued, "that Polachi is dead, and that I shot him, but I think my act was justifiable and I felt sure that the jury would acquit me of murder."

Asked concerning his cast Perruccio explained it with some hesitation as follows: "If strangers came into your house and took your things, threatening to shoot and then attacked a friend, I can't see how I could do much else. When I saw the man fall my friend I thought sure he had knifed him and I sought to protect myself.

"The papers have told tales of white slaves and heartless murder, but that is untrue. I've tried to live right and I wanted to marry and be happy." Mr. and Mrs. Simone, to whose young daughter Angeline, aged fourteen, Perruccio was engaged to be married as soon as she was old enough, spent yesterday with the convicted man in his jail cell. It was in the Simone store that the shooting occurred. The Simones are very friendly with Perruccio and have stood by him throughout the trial.

Young Perruccio is a nice looking, well appearing young fellow, far beyond the average of the majority of his countrymen who are sten in this section of the country. He speaks English with facility and is bright and intelligent.

The report that he wept after hearing the jury's verdict and refused to eat his supper was denied both by him and by Sheriff Whipple, who declared Perruccio was a model prisoner. "I am ready to take whatever punishment the court may give," said Perruccio. "I am sure Judge Grimm will give me a square deal.

"If the papers say that I didn't eat, they should have seen me pack away that Sunday dinner. I am going to eat enough here to prepare for what may come later," and he lapsed into silence, his smiling face taking on a serious frown.

On other topics he was able to converse freely and showed an interest in the sports of the day and was able to talk intelligently on all the subjects brought into ocnversation.

BRICK WALL FALLS; TWO DEAD, FOUR HURT

Storehouse at Hartford, Conn., Collapses onto Frame Dwelling Early Today.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 3.—The entire side of a four-story brick storehouse in North Front street collapsed early today and crashed through the frame dwelling house of John Hughes immediately adjoining. As a result two persons are dead, three fatally injured and another seriously hurt. The dead are: John Hughes, fifty-nine, and Eva Dooley, five, his granddaughter.

The structure, a new building, was filled with bales of rags and tobacco. Michael Greenburg, its owner, said the building was dynamited, but firemen and police found no evidences of an explosion and declared that faulty construction probably caused the collapse.

All the dead and injured were sleeping when the crash came. The wall of the warehouse slipped in a diagonal direction emptying thousands of bales of rags and other goods on top of the Hughes home.

ELECTION RESULTS PLEASING TO POPE

Election of Six Catholic Deputies at Recent General Election Cause for Gratification.

Rome, Italy, Nov. 3.—It was said at the Vatican this morning that the Pope had expressed satisfaction at the election of six more Catholic deputies in the second ballot of the Italian general elections. He was pleased at the defeat of the candidate in Rome supported by the coalition of radicals, republicans and socialists which has been in control of the municipality for so long a time. The defeat of the former priest, Father Romolo Muri, leader of the Catholic democrats, was noted with interest.

Mayor Nathan of Rome will shortly convoke a meeting of the aldermen of the city at which it is expected he will present his resignation. As a municipal election is to take place in June next year, it is assumed that the government will, in the interim, appoint a royal commissioner.

IS ATLANTA FEDERAL PRISON LIVING HELL? YES, SAY MORTON AND HAWTHORNE; WARDEN MOYER WANTS TO BE INVESTIGATED

Atlanta federal prison; Julian Hawthorne, Dr. W. P. Morton (bottom) and Warden W. E. Moyer (right).

When Julian Hawthorne, son of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and his companion, Dr. W. P. Morton, coming out of the Atlanta federal penitentiary on parole, said that the prison was a "living hell" and a place of slow murder, and told why they thought so, they precipitated a debate that is likely not to end until the prison has been turned inside out, and all officials and employes, within its walls, as well as many prisoners of high and low degree, are subjected to the fire of government investigation.

An investigation seems inevitable. Warden W. H. Moyer, the object of Hawthorne's most earnest denunciation, has requested it, and Congressman William Howard, hinting that he is ready to believe the charges made by the two noted prisoners, has promised it, stating that if the department of justice fails to take the matter up he will present it in the form of a resolution on the floor of the house, asking the appointment of a congressional committee to carry on the investigation.

COMMENT ON EDLER'S WORK AT LAWRENCE

Beloit College Students Have Word of Praise for Their Mighty Halfback—Is But a Freshman.

Several studtnts from Beloit College have been heard say that Edler, halfback on the Line City college eleven this fall, should be used more in the games by Coach Evans than he really is. The work of Edler this year has been short of marvelous. He has had little trouble in gaining a place on the second set of backs, and largely because he knows the game from A to Z. His four years' work previous to this year on the Janesville high school eleven perhaps gave him more experience than he would have gained otherwise.

Coach Evans allowed him to enter the game last Saturday against Lawrence in the second quarter, but soon took him out to give way to the other regulars. The students are somewhat dissatisfied, because they feel that if Edler had remained in tht game longer than he did there might have been a different story to tell regarding the outcome.

In the account of the game at Appleton it mentions Edler as making several spectacular runs, one run being for only ten yards, but through the entire Lawrence eleven, with no interference.

CENSUS MAN SAYS 40 IS PRIME OF LIFE

Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur.

Charges that man is past his prime at forty years have been emphatically denied by Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician of the census bureau at Washington. And Dr. Wilbur ought to know, for he himself is forty-eight years old.

"Some alarmist figures and statements," he says, "have recently been published on the alleged authority of the census bureau's mortality statistics, which are, in fact, entirely unwarranted.

SERMON ON SUNDAY BY VISITING PASTOR

Rev. E. O. Robbins Gives Address at Morning Service at Methodist Church.

Taking for his sermon the ninth verse of chapter fourteen of St. John, Rev. E. O. Robbins, of Walla Walla, Washington, who is visiting in the city, delivered a worthy sermon at the Cargill Memorial Methodist church Sunday morning.

"We find that the disciples had questioned Christ in a conference how they were to know God, to know the Father, so that when they were sent out into the world to teach the truth, to be comforted in traveling over the hills of life by a direct knowledge of Him that they had never seen or heard. When questioned by Disciple Phillip Christ said, 'Have I been so long with you and yet thou has not known me, Phillip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? Believest thou thatI am not in the Father and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but of the Father that, swelleth in me, he doeth the works.'

"In other words Christ said, "Knew me, know the Father.' This satisfied the disciples for Christ was going away and he had become their Father and was indispensable to them and the Master, knowing their attitude, turned and said, 'Do not be troubled for I will return again.' If we believe in Christ, the son of God, we know God and if we follow his commandments and laws, we are following the work of Him above, for Christ and God are one. The disciples accepted His answer that in Christ was the spirit of God and as they were acquainted with him, they felt acquainted wtih His Father.

"Is it possible that God be revealed to us? He is in a way unknown to us children of the day and it is impossible for the Finite to see the Infinite. Space is unlimited, the earth beneath is infinite practically speaking and the same is true of duration and time, but even they appear without limit we can measure and understand them. A child's love for his mother he does not comprehend. He knows that she will sacrifice anything for his pleasure but does not really understand how deeply it penetrates and how no measure can weigh it, but knows it exists. It is the same with God, if we know Christ by his medium, the Bible we know God and rejoice in his blessings. We know that the heart of a true follower of the teachings has his heart satisfied, but still the how, when and why go unquestioned. Ask God for our heart warts and we are answered. We should know him in his beauty and glory in his majesty. The thirst and hunger of the disciples for his loves was satisfied by Christ and we should profit by it."

"Some say Nature morally is a proof of his love but it does not teach his depest truth and does not touch his foundations. God is in the flowers, birds, they bloom and are beautiful and everything is happy because of his spirit, we say. How about the Arctic region where the cold bleak regions know no sunshine or nature except vast length of ice and storm wrath, ocean or the barren deserts when the hot sun scorches all signs of life. The beauty of the valleys are lacking, but God is there; God is to be known, not by nature alone, for his love extends from the richest to the humblest homes and lands.

"How does this knowledge come in the Arctic or deserts. To know him is comfort and to the lonely it reaches deep and steadfast. Even the children who are unable to read the work of God and Christ, receive his love and whether we are in the valleys or on the mountains, in trouble or happiness, his love brings joy.

"Is there eternal life If we know him, we are certain of life after death. His love breaks the bars of sin and leads the fallen man back into the paths of liberty and joy.

"God made salvation to save us, to give us refuge, strength, as the lonely Pilgrim, foot-sore and weary, is happy with the teaching of eternal happiness, though his life from appearance is blank.

"Do you know him? Have you heard his comforting promises and had Him revealed by learning Christ. The way is open to the Saviour and he will bid you welcome on the shores beyond the river. God is life, open your eyes, and hearts and see him and rejoice."

MILTON JUNCTION

Milton Junction, Nov. 3.—The freshmen of the high school entertained the other classes at a party, which was held in the laboratory Saturday evening. Hallowe'en decorations were very prominent. Each one present learned their future. Games and marches were enjoyed. Light refreshments were served. A fine time was reported.

Old Custom Survives.

The ancient custom "horn dancing" took place at Abbot Bromley, Burton-on-Trent, England, recently, when costumed dancers carrying reindeer horns which have been stored in the church for four centuries, and astride hobby-horses, went through the countryside to the strains of rag-time music.

A PAROLED WAUKESHA YOUTH IS ARRESTED

Applied for Lodging at Police Station Saturday Night—Had Robbed Farmer He Had Been Working For.

Saturday evening a young man giving his name as Fred S. Sparas, age twenty years, applied at the Janesville police station for a night's lodging, stating that he was broke and was going to work at the sugar beet factory Monday morning. He gave his home as Chicago.

Sunday morning the police received word that the young man in question was a paroled prisoner from the state reform school at Waukesha and had been sent to work under Howard McMan on a farm between Elkhorn and Delavan. Last week McMan missed his razor and a valuable watch, and he at once accused Sparas of being the thief. After a heated argument the young man admitted stealing the property and returned the watch and razor.

McMan in his rage, is alleged to have given Sparas physical punishment and handing him a dollar and a half and told him to get off the place. Sparas made his way to Janesville and Sunday morning admitted being a Waukesha prisoner and gave a detailed account of his parolement.

At the station he was searched and the authorities found an old relic revolver that contained several shells, one of which was loaded. Sparas stated that he had found the gun at the Northwestern station, but later said he bought it at a second hand store on South Main street. The police are inclined to doubt both explanations as the gun is at least forty years old, being one of the first twenty-two calibers manufactured. It is known as an old square seven shooter or "pop" gun.

The weapon created great amusement to the police because of its small caliber and antique qualities. One of the officers ventured to wager that the weapon cost twenty-five dollars when new, as the silver side plates are engraved and was one of the first seven shooters on the market. The grip is curved and the hammer is as large as the modern forty-fives are equipped with.

The young man has been sent to Waukesha from Medford, Wisconsin, by his foster parents, from whom he had run away. From the reformatory he was paroled to his foster parents, but refused to work for them and went back to Waukesha. From there he was sent to a farmer in Taylor county until he was sent back and paroled to McMan at Avalon. An official came this morning to take him to Waukesha to serve the remainder of his time, which is only a few months.

On the Spur of the Moment

The College Goat.

They laid him on his manly back
and tied him to the railroad track.
And told him it was most time for the train.
He sobbed aloud in keenest grief, because it was his firm belief
He'd never see his fond mamma again.
They rescued him in nick of time
and then to cover up the crime
They dropped him in a well and let him soak.
They took him in an hour or two and pounded him all black and blue,
And hanied him from a bridge, just for a joke.

And then in manner coarse and rude, they took his clothes and left him nude.
And made him run for home with all his might;
But caught him e'er he had gone far and daubed him up with lukewarm tar
And feathers until he was a lurid sight.
They made him climb a dozen trees and shiver in the autumn breeze,
And rode him on a rail for half an hour.
He barked his shins and skinned his nose and lost nine pounds of adipose.
While climbing up the bellrope in the tower.

And then they thought it would be nice to tie him to some cakes of ice,
And float him down the river o'er the dam.
They hanged him up then by the heels and gloried in his frightened squeals,
And painted him with huckleberry jam.
They made him dance on red-hot bricks and sing a song and do some tricks,
And climb a greased pole sixty-five feet tall,
The reason is not hard to see. The secret of it was that he
Was joining a fraternity, that's all.

New York Notes

In some of the large office buildings here they have revolving doors that operate by motive power. They keep right on going around and you have got to jump in and out at just the psychological moment. When you are inside of the thing you must keep on a sort of a dog trot. I was inside of one of the big insurance buildings and wanted to get out. A vacant section of the door came around and I jumped into it. Every time I tried to jump out into the street I jumped just about four seconds too late and landed back in the building. This continued for some time and upon the occasion of one of my fights into the building the policeman on duty there asked me if I was just moving around for pleasure or was I training for a cross country Marathon. There was one little old gentleman in the revolving door who was trying to get into the building, but each time he would jump out into the street. Finally he gave up in despair and ran around and around with no attempt to get out at all. I was told that the machinery stopped at 6 o'clock and they probably rescued him at that time.

If a person likes to travel, but doesn't have any place in particular to go he can do no better than to jump into one of the revolving doors that run by electric power. One of these compartment doors will accommodatee four persons at a time and with the old gentleman and myself running around in it all the afternoon the flow of travel by that particular door was reduced about 50 per cent. For a person who wants to do lots of running around while in New York, these doors solve the proilem.

A slicker from down to the city was through our town last week and put Constable Ezra Hand down for some accident insurance. It is impossible to see what in toplet the constable wants of accident insurance, as he ain't ever around when anything happens, either by accident or premditation.

COLLEGE COMEDY IS GIVEN BY STUDENTS

"The Sophomore" Rendered by Students of Milton High School Under Direction of Miss Roy.

Milton, Nov. 3.—The Milton high school gave a very interesting college comedy Thursday evening, Oct. 30, entitled "The Sophomore," before a large and appreciative audience. The play was a success in every respect, and the ability shown by some of the students who took part was a pleasing surprise to many of those present.

The parts had been wisely chosen and carefully coached by Miss Roy, teacher of English, and no small amount of credit is due to her untiring efforts.

The leading character, "The Sophomore," was creditably carried out by Lto Lanphere. Miss Mamie Gunderson made a decided hit as "Hope Alden, as "Stuttering Buster Brown," "Prof. Alden," her father, an absentmindtd old physics teacher, was strikingly impersonated by Elmer Rumpf. "Aunt Mary Scott" and "Cousin Matilda Dwiggins," two old maid aunts, were very cleverly carried out by Beth Bingham and Eva Gurley, while Ruth Bingham, as "Violet," the maid, drew many a laugh from the audience.

The parts of "Bud Kennedy," captain of the football team, "Coach Livingston," "Kirk Bannister," special chum of "The Sophomore," were well taken by Arthur Curtis, Fred Crumb and Paul Randolph, while Clarke Borden, as "Stuttering Busttr Brown," threw the audience into convulsions of laughter every time he appeared on the stagt.

The other characters were also pleasingly represented by those shown in the program below. The high school orchestra furnished appropriate music. The proceeds from the play go to the Athletic Association fund. Program of play:

"WITHIN THE LAW" IS HIGH CLASS DRAMA

Bayard Veiller's Great Modern Day Production Proves Sensation Before Packed House.

Miss Jane Gordon, taking the leading role, that of Mary Turner, in Bayard Veiller's masterful drama "Within the Law," at the Myers Theatre Saturday afternoon and evening proved the biggest hit of the season, before one of the largest audiences on record at a high priced production. The matinee was well attended, while in the evening, there was scarcely an empty seat throughout the main floor, or balcony. The gallery was crowded to its capacity.

The play is set in the heart of New York City, where the crowded metropolis is always the scene of light pickpockets, or thieves. The play to a certain extent is a real story of everyday life, although it points out more in detail the real sense of justice to that of law, stating, that the courts of today are courts of law and not courts of justice. Wilson Reynolds, as Edward Gilder, proprietor of a metropolitan department store, in the eastern city, took his position very sternly, and he catered especially to the rich, while his own working girls, earning but six dollars per week, would be treated like slaves. A plea in act one, by Jane Gordon, set many in the audience to tears.

Miss Eileen Wilson, as Agnes Lynch, spread humor throughout the four acts, using many favorite slang expressions which brought forth much applause.

William Lambert, taking the part of the criminal, Joe Garson, treated his subject with all of the character that was necessary. His appearance in act four, showing his stage of nervous prostration, after killing Inspector Burke's stool pigeon, was pitiful, until he made his confession, thereby freeing Mary Turner and her husband, Edward Gilder's son, Richard, who were married following her freedom from prison.

Every character in the production was good. There was no flaw found in its rendering, and the drama was met by everyone with approval.

The play is about one year old, and has been played with great success in New York and Chicago, this summer. While Margaret Illington the star leader, acting as Mary Turner, in the original company, was not here, her place was well filled by Jane Gordon, an actress with enviable reputation.

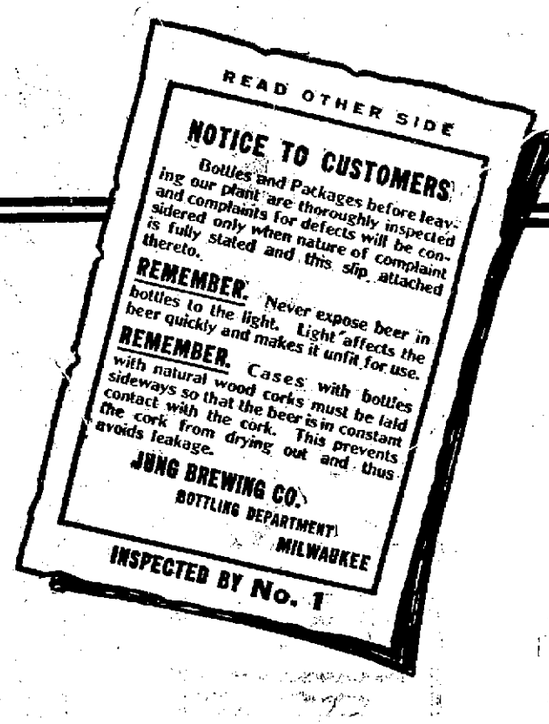

Ahem!

"Waiter," ordered the fussy-looking customer, sniffing the air suspiciously, "never mind bringing that order. I never can eat when there's a smell of fresh paint around." "If you'll just wait a few minutes," replied the waiter, "them two young ladies will be going."

Impotent Rage.

"It has been a long time since I have read any contemporaneous poetry that moved me to tears." "Only the other day I read a poem that moved me to tears." "How did it move you so?" "I wept because I couldn't get at the author."—Birmingham Age Herald.

UNCLE WALT

The Poet Philosopher

Copyright, 1909, by George Matthew Adams

BY WALT MASON

When Britain sends her gifted bards to visit "Yankee" shores, we take them warmly to our breasts, e'en though we find them bores; we compliment their blooming lyres, we boost their blawsted song, and when they leave our bloody land they take our praise along. We feed them at our groaning board, as though they might be earls, and introduce them to our aunts and all the spinster girls; we try to make them feel that British and Americans are brothers, true as steel. But when we sent to England's shore a bard without a lid, it was a burning, screaming shame, the things those Britons did. They didn't take him to their homes or to the banquet hall, they didn't hang his picture where it might be seen by all; they didn't drink the poet's health in brown October ale; they grabbed him where his clothes were slack and fired him into jail. A blooming jurist sized him up and muttered to the bard: "You'll ave to 'ump yourself in 'ock—three weeks of labor 'ard!" And when your bloody term is hup we'll ship you from this shore, and don't come 'ustling 'ere again, or you will get some more!" And shall the Eagle now submit, or claw the Lion's tail? How can we boast about our flag while Harry Kemp's in jail?

Orfordville, Nov. 3.—Principal Harrup and family went to Whitewater on Friday evening to visit with relatives there.

Brittingham & Hixon Lumber company have their office moved onto the new foundation and are planning to get the large scales in as soon as possible.

Hallowe'en passed off very quietly in the village, no pranks being committed. This does not indicate that the boys of Orfordville are less given to this line of behavior than in other towns, but rather that the vigilant eye of the Marshall and the austere frown of the police justice exercised a soothing effect on the risinge generation.

The "Needlecraft" of the Lutheran church met with Miss Gena Stuvengen on Saturday afternoon. There was a good attendance and an enjoyable time.

Mrs. N. N. Tollefsrud, who went to Mercy Hospital and underwent an operation for appendicitis, returned home on Saturday morning.

Miss Marion Howe entertained a company of her girl friends at a Hallowe'en party on Friday evening. The usual Hallowe'en stunts were indulged in and a general good time is reported.

The new crossing just west of the depot was opened for travel on Friday. There was strife among drivers as to who should have the honor of being the first to cross.

A. G. Hayerdahl and Oliver Clemetson left for the north on Monday and will spend some time in quest of deer or other large game. They will be located near Grand View, and expect to go into camp with Tom Everson, who has been there for several weeks.

KEEP LOOKING YOUNG

It's Easy—If You Know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

The secret of keeping young—is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle.

Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver. Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, are gentle in their action, yet always effective. They bring about that exuberance of spirit, that natural buoyancy which should be enjoyed by everyone, by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities. You will know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets by their olive color. 10c and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, Ohio.

FRAIL, WEAKLY CHILD

Made Strong by Vinol.

So many cases like this are coming to our attention for the benefit of fathers and mothers of weak, sickly, ailing children in this vicinity we publish the following letter:

Mrs. J. P. Weatherford, Litchfield, Ill., says: "We have had an invalid child for the past nine years and until we began using Vinol, we sometimes thought there was little hope for him. He would have terrible coughing spells at night, and they would leave him so exhausted. We tried everything, but to no avail. At last some one suggested that we try Vinol, and we noticed a change in him from the very first. The coughing spells ceased and he gained in strength right along. We would not be without it and would advise parents who have frail and weakly children to try Vinol."

This is because the child needed the strengthening cod liver elements and the tonic iron that Vinol contains. No oil, delicious taste. Children love it. We give back your money if Vinol does not benefit. Smith Drug Co., Druggists, Janesville, Wis.

CHAPTER XI.

A Close Call.

Holton's first instinct was to utter the girl's name; but flashing second thought came to his rescue, and he broke into a volley of Spanish ejaculations. As he went on she stood regarding him fixedly, and finally, seeing a peculiar expression settle upon her wonderful face, he paused.

"Mr. Holton!" Her voice was low, almost guttural.

Holton sprang toward her.

"Miss La Tossa—Ranee!" His voice, too, was low, quivering with emotion.

She stepped back, and, pointing her finger at him, repeated with blazing eyes her first question.

"What are you doing here?" Then she stopped and looked at him. "Do you realize what you have done?"

She reached up hastily and extinguished the lamp she had lighted.

"Mr. Holton," she continued, as the young officer stood silently regarding her, "have you truly no desire to live?"

"I was captured in the battle," replied Holton. "I escaped and—and—"

"How—why did you come in here?"

"Because a soldier on the road—I mean a farmer—a planter—told me this was your home."

"And you wish me to hide you?"

"No, I wish to leave."

"But you cannot."

"I came in here; I am able to leave."

"No, you are not," she whispered. "General Toral's and Admiral Cervera's escort are outside now." She peered out of the window. "I can see them."

"Well, Sir, What Are You Doing Here?"

Holton looked for himself, and saw the front of the house lined with mounted men. He faced her irresolutely.

"But I must get away at once," he remonstrated. "I cannot stay here."

"Then why did you come here? How did you get in?"

"I wanted to see you," replied Holton, "The door was open, and I walked in."

She looked at him a moment doubtfully. Then she shook her head.

"That was not why you came here. You did not come here to see me."

"But, nevertheless, I wanted to see you."

She went on as though he had not spoken.

"It is quite clear now." She was about to continue, when steps were heard in the hall and a voice called her name:

"Ranee! Ranee, my daughter!"

She pushed Holton into the folds of a heavy tapestry by the door, and then looked out into the hall.

"Yes, father. Here I am."

"Oh, yes! I wish you would ask Maria to prepare a guest-room for Senor Cesnola. He decides to remain the night with us."

"Yes, father," and with a warning "S-sh!" Miss La Tossa went out into the hall and disappeared.

The two men stood near the door, chatting.

"My daughter," complained La Tossa, "is still very restive. She escaped from us the day before the battle on horseback, and was gone the entire day."

"It is just as well," was the laughing reply. "She will do no harm now, for, while your daughter counts on the mine exploding after they have vanquished us, I can assure you that the fuse will be lighted a great while before that rather visionary event."

"You told me that young naval officer who was with Garcia had been executed," went on La Tossa. "I am rather sorry for that. He was a likable young man apparently."

"You need spare your grief," was the rejoinder. "When I so informed you I believed my orders had been carried out. But, as it appears, he escaped."

"Your orders!" ejaculated La Tossa. "And when have you assumed the prerogatives of life and death?"

"Spies must assume such prerogatives occasionally," was the quiet reply. "This young man Holton was in a position to undo my work. He was in my way. As a consequence, I forged Muller's name to a warrant for his execution. That fact may wound your sensibilities; but this is war, not child's play."

Holton's eyes fairly glared through the darkness, and yet, despite his anger, he was pleased to know that the murderous order was the work of a renegade and that it had not the sanction of authority.

"Well, I must say I am glad he was not executed," remarked La Tossa. "My daughter"—his voice sank low—"is, I believe, very fond of him."

"And you approve?"

"Oh, it has not gone so far as that! But I do know that in some way her little secret amour has exerted upon her a repressing influence, has caused her to mope and to brood—in other words, to curb activities which formerly caused me much worry."

Miss La Tossa appeared at the moment, and the two men rejoined their comrades in the opposite room.

"Are you here?" she whispered.

"Yes." Holton stepped before her. "Now listen, Miss La Tossa, I have something I wish to tell you. When I met you before I was unable to reassure your fears as to your country. Now I am. I have spent seven days among the leaders of our army, and I know their intentions. I wish to assure you as a man of honor that as soon as Santiago is taken, as soon as the city and the province are utterly rid of the Spaniards, and as soon as order is restored here, our troops are going to withdraw."

"Is this true?" she whispered tensely.

"It is true, and more. I heard Admiral Sampson and several high army officers assure General Garcia that as soon as practicable the Americans would withdraw, leaving him, General Garcia, as governor of the province. Now, there is no doubt of this at all. I have heard it with my own ears—" He paused and held out his hand. "Are we friends?" he added.

She met his hand impulsively.

"Yes, a thousand times, and God bless you Americans!"

Holton drew her fingers to his lips and kissed them. As he bent thus a figure darkened the doorway and a sneering voice broke the silence.

"A very charming picture, indeed!"

Holton swung around quickly, and before him, his face writhing with a saturnine grin, stood Cesnola. Holton's hand flew to his revolver, but the face and a significant flash of steel on a line with the man's waist gave him pause.

"I know, I know," he laughed, "but just the same, I think you had better leave the weapon in its holster. For I have—what do you Americans say?—ah, the drop on you!"

The girl stamped her foot.

"Senor Cesnola, I command you to leave us; you are a guest here."

"I shall not leave you. On the contrary, I must ask you to slip that revolver from your friend's belt." He stopped, as though struck with a thought. "But you need not mind. I suggest merely that you quit the room; there is about to be an execution."

Holton stood facing the man, immovable as a statue. The girl stepped forward.

"You are lying!" she cried. "There will be no execution."

"Oh, but yes, there will be!" was the smiling rejoinder, "and right before your eyes unless you retire."

"You fiend!" With a sudden, lithe movement she sprang in front of Holton. "Now fire, if you dare!"

Holton placed his hands upon her supple waist and lifted her to one side. The revolver darted forward to aim. The girl uttered a little cry and sprang back, seizing the American's coat with her hands stretched behind her.

"Miss La Tossa!" cried Holton. "You—you—"

Cesnola's face was working with the rage of a fanatic.

"Out of the way, girl!" he cried, glancing behind him at the door of the opposite room, which he had closed as he left it. "That man is a spy! He has got to die! He is an enemy, a snake in the grass, not worthy of a minute's quarter!"

Miss La Tossa never moved; and Holton, his mind working like lightning, did not attempt to put her aside.

"Out of the way," repeated the Spaniard, with a sort of hissing of the breath. "Out of the way, or, by God! I'll shoot through you."

There was the crash of an opening door.

"What's this—this noise and shouting?" came a deep voice.

Holton, watching his enemy like a hawk, saw the revolver-barrel deflected from him, the man's head turned in the direction whence the voice had come. Springing backward and sidewise like a deer, Holton shot across the room.

There was a loud report—a bullet singed his hair. The next instant he had leaped through the window, glass and all, and was on the porch. From here, as two bullets sped after him, he leaped down upon the back of a horse that was being held by a soldier. Striking the animal with the butt of his revolver, he went careering off through the darkness like a rocket.

From the men on the drive, from men on the porch, came a rain of bullets; and Holton, who had learned a trick or two in the way of horsemanship, slipped down along the animal's body, shielding himself almost completely. But the horse was exposed, and a whining bullet pierced the steed to the heart. He suddenly plunged forward, throwing Holton to the ground, then rolled over and was still.

Holton landed on his knees, and, although jarred, was not stunned. He scrambled along desperately, regaining his feet, and struck out for the woods, about a hundred feet away.

He toiled on for two hours, distancing all sounds of pursuit, and then flung himself on the wet ground like a tired animal and fell at once into a deep sleep. When he awoke the sun was shining through the trees.

But it was not this that had roused him. It was the roaring of field ordnance and the racketing of small arms. Evidently they were at it again. His one thought was that this was the 2nd of July, and that on the morrow the Spanish warships meant to dash out of the harbor and attempt an escape.

His fleet must be warned. That was what he was there for, and this, from now on, must be the single aim of his life, the one thought in his mind, the supreme struggle of his body.

By constant concentration upon the object of his mission, he brought his mental condition into a sort of hysteria. The heat, too, had got into his brain. As he stumbled over a log he would sob or curse, and once, when he tripped and was thrown flat, he lay for a second, weeping like a child.

So he went on until once, upon climbing a tree to ascertain his position, he looked down upon the upper waters of the harbor. He was on the hills to the right, and another hour's journey would bring him within signal of his fleet.

He struggled feebly, and then lay back with the realization that, great as was the exigency, he was not able to meet it. A sort of stupor, partly hunger, partly fatigue, stole over him, and he closed his eyes.

It was night when he opened them again, starlit night. At first he could not recall where he was. Then he remembered, and with a start remembered why he was there.

He sat up and with difficulty got on his feet. Then he walked. He did not know he was walking; he had no consciousness of moving, and no sense of direction; but his subconscious powers were leading him right. A breath of pure salt air blew on his face. He turned toward a line of brush and parted it, and there, below him, lay the Spanish fleet, their lights, reflected in the velvet waters, twinkling and winking. He heard the chug-chug of a steam launch, and several times the murmur of a voice rose to his ears.

Farther down, in the moonlight, he could see the masts and funnel of Hobson's Merrimac. Ships' bells struck as he looked, and the sound floated sweetly to the hilltops.

He turned his face seaward and walked along, partially revivified by his rest. At length a sense of openness came upon him, the sensation of a vast void in front of him. He paused, and then stole noiselessly onward, until at last, passing through a growth of manigut, the wide expanse of the Caribbean lay before him.

Here he flung himself on the ground and waited for morning. His limbs were aching with almost unbearable pain. His eyes burned with fever, his head throbbed. And yet all these things he regarded lightly, for the Caribbean was in front of him, and the American fleet would receive his warning as soon as God brought the dawn.

Dinner Stories

Two men were on an expedition to the colonel's hen roost one dark night. Mose had planted the ladder, climbing up to where the chickens were roosting, and was passing them down to Ephraim, who put them in a

bag. Suddenly Mose stopped. "What's de mattah, Brudder Mose?" inquired Ephraim anxiously. "Is just been thinkin', Brudder Ephraim, how me and you is membahs ub de church, an' wedder it's right to take de cunnel's chickings." "Brudder Mose," said Ephraim, "dat am a great moral question which you an' me aint fit ter wrastle wid. Pass down anudder chicking."

There was "standing room only" in the street car, and the two young women peered in vain for a seat.

"Just watch me get one," the prettier of the two whispered.

She approached a "tired business man," whose nose was in his paper.

"Why, Mr. Smith, how do you do? You're quite a stranger. Will I accept your seat? Oh, thank you so much."

With a malicious smile the man arose and doffed his hat.

"Sit down, Nora, my girl," he said. "Have you been ill? I notice you didnt call for our wash this week!"

And "Nora" crimsoned while the car tittered.

SLING-SHOT WITH SIGHT

Enables User to Draw Accurate Bead On Object Aimed At.

There are people who will feel that in fitting up a slingshot with a sighting loop at the top two Pennsylvania men have stretched their ingenuity unnecessarily. The average small boy can come uncomfortably near his target with the home-made weapon. This glorified affair is made of wire, twisted to form the frame and with wire springs in the ends of the frame to increase the force of the shot. An elastic band holds the missile, as in the old-time "slappy." But here comes the devilment: In the top of the frame the inventors have set an open circle that serves as a sight and enables the user of the weapon to shoot with a great deal more accuracy than otherwise. For target practice this is excusable. In the schoolroom it would wreak havoc.

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

Why the Kangaroo Has Such a Long Tail

DONALD and Nurse were seated under the big oak tree at the Zoo. Nurse was waiting for the big, blond Keeper to come along and chat with her. Donald was waiting, curled up on a shawl spread upon the ground, for his eyelids to grow heavy with sleep for his afternoon nap.

Not that he liked to sleep—oh, no! But then, you recall, he very often encountered his queer little friend, the Old Man of the Woods and went with him on pleasant jaunts among the animals—when he was asleep, and only when asleep!

Presently, Donald dozed off into the Land of Nod and then—out of nowhere—sprang up the Old Man. Such a queer old man he was, too, with his humming-bird feather coat, fur trousers and wrinkled smiling face.

"Good afternoon, my boy," he said. "Come, sit on this magic leaf and we'll sail away to the cage of the kangaroo in the far corner of the Zoo. I have a most interesting story to tell you about kangaroos. Come—quick—we're off!"

And in less time than it takes you to open and close your eyes the leaf had carried them through the air and deposited them gently on the ground by the side of the enclosure in which the kangaroo was disporting himself.

"Once upon a time, long before there was any such creature as Man on the earth," said Donald's strange companion, "the Kangaroo came to me weeping and wailing and begged me to help him. As you will recall, Donald, I was the king of all living things then, and they all came to me to settle their disputes and bind up their wounds.

"Well, the Kangaroo then did not look like kangaroos do now, Donald. No indeed. Now, you see, they have little, short, weak fore-legs and big, long, powerful hind legs—strong enough to kick out with and knock a man senseless. Besides, there is that thick, tremendous tail, tapering out to such a small point.

"But at that time, Donald, the Kangaroo's hind legs were no longer than his front ones; and his tail was about the size of that of a rabbit. Even then he was a swift runner, though he did not hop along, in great, bounding leaps, as he does now.

"'Oh, oh, oh, Mr. Old Man of the Woods,' wailed the Kangaroo—I can remember even now how silly he sounded—'please, please help me to get that Sweetumbite!'

"'What?' I exclaimed. 'Sweetumbite? What in the world is that?'

"The Kangaroo stopped wailing, dried his eyes and put his absurd little pocket handkerchief back in his pouch—yes, in those days all kangaroos had them—and looked at me in surprise.

"'Sweetumbite!' he cried. 'Don't you know a sweetumbite when you see one, Mr. Old Man of the Woods?'

"'No! I do not!' I replied somewhat testily, I'm afraid, 'and I don't believe you do, either!'

"'Come with me, please—and I'll show it to you,' he declared.

"I was so amazed I could scarcely scramble to my feet to follow him. A Sweetumbite! Could it be that there was something new in the forest, something that I knew nothing about? Well, hardly. Of course you know what a Sweetumbite is, Donald?"—and the Old Man's eyes twinkled roguishly for a moment or two as he chuckled over the blank, puzzled expression that had settled upon little Donald's face. "There, there," he continued presently, "don't try to remember, Donald, for you never did even hear of a Sweetumbite, much less see one!

"After a while Kangaroo stopped by the side of some very tall bushes and pointed upward with one of his short, stubby little forelegs.

"'There,' he cried triumphantly, 'there it is, Mr. Old Man of the Woods! Look—isn't it luscious! And, oh, I do so want to eat it! My mouth is fairly watering for it!'

"I was almost dumbfounded. So, then, a Sweetumbite was something to eat! I looked up in the direction

Longer and longer grew his hind legs, until he certainly was a queer-looking animal.

Kangaroo was pointing and, sure enough, there among the leaves was what appeared to be the most tempting fruit I had ever seen.

"It was about as big as a cantaloupe, and one-half of it was the color of a peach just ripe and ready to drop, while the other half was the beautiful purple of a plum that would melt in your mouth. It certainly did look tempting; and no wonder poor Kangaroo, who had nothing to eat but leaves and sprouts and berries that grew close to the ground—no wonder his mouth watered for it!

"'Hum-m-m-m,' said I to myself, greatly puzzled. 'Hum-m-m!' Then, suddenly, I began to see the light.

"'Kangaroo,' I asked, 'when did you first see this—this—this Sweetumbite—and why do you call it that?'

"'Oh,' he answered, 'the Laughing Hyena pointed it out to me a little while ago; and then Monkey came along and told me it was called a Sweetumbite because it is such luscious fruit. And then he talked a long time about what a pity it was that my legs weren't long enough for me to stand up and reach it. And that's why I came to you, Mr. Old Man. I want you to make my legs grow so I can reach up and eat that gorgeous Sweetumbite!'

"I thought I would simply burst with laughter, Donald, at that silly Kangaroo; but I managed to keep a straight face. The idea! Poor Kangaroo! And that mischievous Monkey! Then the thought occurred to me that, after all, the Laughing Hyena has to have something to laugh about now and then—and at that I very nearly laughed right out loud. Now I understood it all. But I made up my mind to teach that foolish, foolish Kangaroo a lesson.

"So I let him beg and plead for a while and then I agreed.

"'Kangaroo,' I said, 'you shall have your wish—if you will stand the consequences. I'll wave my Magic Wand and your legs will grow longer. But I can't make them short again, after you have eaten that Sweetumbite. They'll have to stay that way.'

"'I don't care! I don't care!' he cried, his mouth watering and a greedy look coming into his eyes. 'Please, please hurry!'

"So I waved my Wand and his legs began to stretch and stretch. There he stood, trying to balance himself and reach up, with mouth open and his little forelegs pawing the air. Longer and longer grew his hind legs, and bigger and stronger and thicker, until he certainly was a queer, ungainly looking animal.

"'Faster! Make them grow faster, please, please!' he would cry out every now and then.

"At last, with a cry of joy, his legs took a sudden final sprout and his greedy jaws closed over the Sweetumbite. Down to earth he came, all excited and eager to begin his feast. But even as he bit into the luscious fruit his jaws became fixed and a queer, puzzled look came into his eyes. Then I simply couldn't hold in any longer and I rolled over and over on the ground, laughing until I thought my sides would split.

"That Sweetumbite—that beautiful, luscious Sweetumbite—mind you, was nothing but a sour old gourd that the Laughing Hyena and that mischievous Monkey had painted and hung up in the bushes for the express purpose of playing a practical joke on poor Kangaroo!

"Well, to make a long story short, Kangaroo flew into a rage and then wept bitter tears of disappointment. But the worst of it was that when he started to walk sadly away, the rear end of him was sticking so high up in the air and the front so close to the ground that at every move he would turn a complete sommersault. He couldn't even hop along on his hind legs, as Kangaroos do nowadays, for he had no long tail with which to balance himself when he hopped!

"Poor fellow! I almost felt sorry for him. He begged and begged me to make his legs short again. But I reminded him that he had agreed not to object to them, and impressed upon him the fact that his own greedy appetite was responsible for his predicament—just as little boys and girls often get into trouble, you know, Donald, when they insist upon having something that isn't good for them. So I refused.

"Then he pleaded with me to make his front legs long, so they would balance with his hind ones. But again I refused; and I did so because I wanted him to be reminded thereafter of his foolishness every time he looked at those stubby little front legs. But finally, when I simply couldn't stand his weeping any longer, I relented and waved my Magic Wand so that his tail grew long enough and big enough to balance him when he hopped along.

"He was overjoyed and promised never to be greedy again. And that, Donald, is why kangaroos have such long tails. It is true they have learned to make excellent use of them and would—whew! Donald, there's Nurse calling you. Goodbye! I must be off!"

"Donald! Donald!" It was Nurse's voice. "Wake up—it's time to be going home!"

"Um-m-m-m," mumbled Donald, sitting up and rubbing his eyes. There were Nurse and the blond Keeper bending over him and smiling at him.

"Um-m-m-m," said Donald again.

"My, I thought you never would wake up!" exclaimed Nurse.

By now Donald was wide awake.

"Mr. Keeper," he asked presently, "do your kangaroos at the Zoo eat Sweetumbites?"

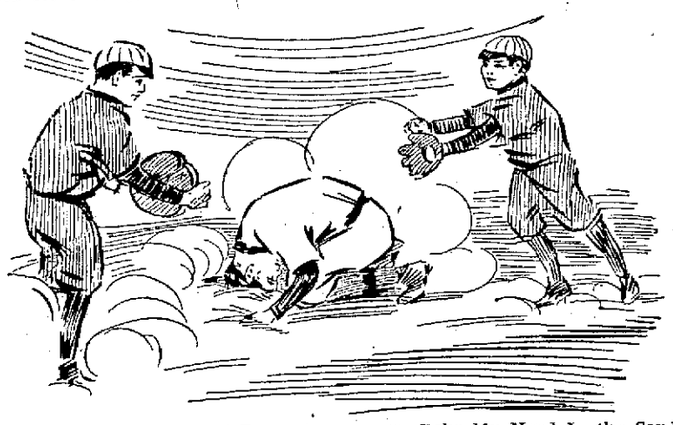

"Sweet—what? Sweetumbites!" exclaimed the Keeper. "Why, I never heard of such a thing! Where in the world did you get the idea, Donald, that——"

"Pshaw! Don't mind him, Harry," said Nurse, "he's just been having another one of those foolish dreams of his. Sweetumbite—sounds like something good to eat, doesn't it?"

Lanky, The Human Ostrich

"TELL us a story, Uncle David."

James and Max Eastwood, cousins, had been playing catch. Max, with his mamma, was visiting his cousin James. Mr. Eastwood, James' father, had been sitting on the porch reading a newspaper, but the fast-gathering twilight had caused him to throw it down and watch the boys as they tossed a twine ball to and fro. Growing tired of the game of catch, the boys threw down their mits and approached the veranda. It was Max who voiced the plea for a story.

What Did I Do But Kneel Down And Try To Poke My Head In the Sand.

"A story, eh?" replied Mr. Eastwood. "Oh, go along and play catch. It will do you a heap more good."

"Aw, we are tired playing catch, dad," said James. "Now's just the time to tell stories."

"Yes, please do, Uncle David," begged Max.

"You boys are nuisances," Mr. Eastwood said, and he pulled his chair around so he could put his feet upon the railing, threw his head back and studied a moment. "Well, boys, what shall it be about?"

"Baseball," replied Max, who was a devoted baseball fan.

"Yes, make it a baseball story," said James.

"All right, boys. Then you must give the closest attention."

Mr. Eastwood scratched his head, screwed his mouth out of shape and winced as if undecided where to begin.

"Ostriches," he commenced very slowly, "can kick powerfully hard. They have very strong muscles. That's what makes them run fast. But the queerest thing is that when pursued they will stick their heads in the sand and imagine that no one can see them."

The boys looked at each other, disgusted.

"Aw, dad!" protested James. "We want to hear a baseball story. We don't care for ostriches. We learn about such things at school."

"That's all right, son," replied Mr. Eastwood. "Just hold your horses. This is a baseball story, and I just want you to remember that fact about the ostriches. It is necessary to my story."

James and Max began to feel that Mr. Eastwood was playing a joke on them, but said nothing and listened attentively.

"Well, now, if you'll remember what I said about ostriches," continued Mr. Eastwood, "we'll proceed. Lanky Stone was a pitcher on the Hill City club. He was just an ordinary pitcher and managed to win about half his games. The season was almost over when Lanky and some other members of the club went out to the city zoo one morning. To pass away the time they stopped at each of the cages, viewing the various animals with much amusement and jesting, as characteristic of baseball players.

"When they came to the ostrich enclosure and were watching the tall, ungainly creatures, one of the players, full of mischief, threw Lanky Stone's hat over the fence. Lanky, never realizing the danger, leaped over the fence into the enclosure, bent on rescuing his hat. But he never reached it. One of the ostriches took offense at the intrusion and kicked him a good, hard rap, squarely on top of the head. Lanky keeled over, unconscious."

"Aw!" escaped from both boys involuntarily.

"Did it kill Lanky?" asked Max.

"No," replied his uncle. "It did not. He was hustled to a hospital, and though the doctors called it a severe case, he was out of the hospital within three days. When the players asked him how he felt he replied that he never felt better in his life, though he admitted he did feel a little queer in his head sometimes.

"Lanky returned to the ball yard but did not pitch for a few days, for the manager told him he wanted Lanky to be fully recovered before he started a game. To keep his arm in shape, Lanky pitched to the second-string catcher, warming up in case one of the pitchers should 'aviate.' You boys know what 'aviate' means, don't you?"

"Sure," replied James, confidently. "It means being pounded all over the lot."

It was evident that both boys knew baseball to perfection.

"The queer part of it was," continued Mr. Eastwood, "that the catcher who did the receiving for Lanky in the warming pan complained to the pitcher that he was throwing too hard.

"'What's the use of putting so much speed on the ball?' asked the catcher. 'If you throw like this in practice you'll not have enough steam to start a game.'

"'I'm not throwing hard,' replied Lanky. 'I'm just lobbing them over.'

"And Lanky meant it. He was actually throwing easy, but for some mysterious reason his arm had grown powerfully strong and he was able to throw a ball with unusual speed, even when not exerting himself. The catcher thought Lanky was joking when he said he was not throwing hard. So the manager did not hear of it.

"About a week after he had been out of the hospital, Lanky started a game. It was with the Jacksonville Grays. Well, to get to the heart of the matter, Lanky found himself pitching the best game of his life. Both Hill City catchers had retired, claiming that Lanky's twirling was too hot for them to handle. The manager himself, who used to catch in his playing days, took up the receiving, though he could scarcely hold Lanky's delivery. Lanky struck out man after man and didn't allow a single hit.

"But the other pitcher was doing fine work, too, and the Hill City players had been unable to get a run around. Unfortunately Jacksonville had scored two runs without a hit, both runs being due to passed balls and dropped third strikes. As a result, the home fans were bewailing their hard luck when Hill City came to bat in the ninth inning two runs behind.

"The first man up cracked out a single to right. The next man sacrificed. Lanky was up next and responded with a crashing double to center. He was advanced to third on an infield out. Now let Lanky tell the rest himself:

"'I felt that queer sensation in my head. Things grew blank before my eyes. For some reason or other I got the idea I was an ostrich. As I waited at third I felt like eating the sack, sawdust and all. Brady, the next man up, beat out a safe hit to second. As I started for home the second baseman shot the ball to catcher. I saw him waiting there with the ball, so I ran back toward third and the catcher had the ball there waiting for me. When I saw myself surrounded by the enemy I just naturally was scared plum crazy. So what did I do but kneel down and try to poke my head in the sand that filled the running path? Oh, oh, I'll never forget it!'

"So you can imagine how badly Lanky felt, losing the ball game 2 to 1, just because he acted like an ostrich."

"What became of Lanky?" asked Max, who had been much impressed with the story.

"Oh, he's still pitching in the same league, but he's quit trying to be an ostrich, both in arm and head."

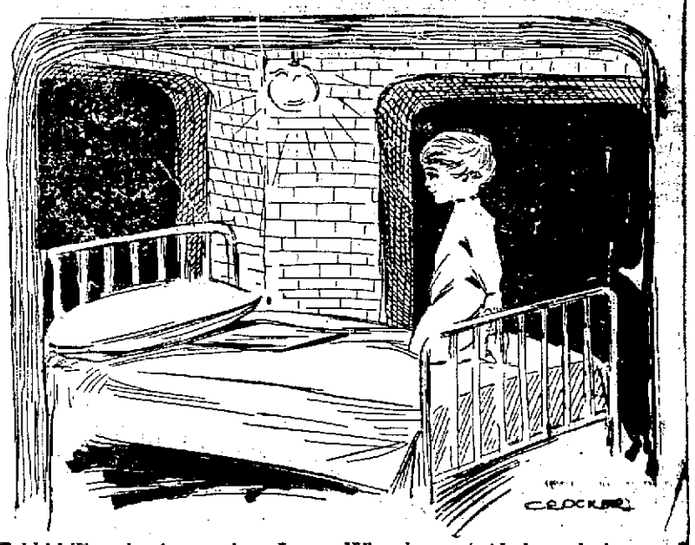

There was silence a few seconds. Presently James said to his cousin:

"Do you believe that story, Max?"

"No, I don't. Do you, Uncle David?"

"Oh, come now, boys. Next time we go to Hill City I'll take you out to the zoo and show you the very ostrich. Now run along and don't bother me."

The Sleeping Porch

I HAVE a sleeping porch so I
Can get acquainted with the sky;
My sleeping bag is warm and tight
And I crawl in it every night.

Then mamma takes away the lamp
And I pretend I am a tramp
Who sleeps outside beneath the trees
Where he can smell the healthy breeze.

It's always just like April-fool—
I dream I'm swimming in a pool
With Jap and Chink and Hottentot
And wake up sorry I am not.

THE OPOSSUM

A 'POSSUM is so very sly
He does not run away or cry,
Nor does he turn about and fight
When hunters seek him in the night.

But lies quite still and does not stir
And looks just like a bunch of fur.
He thinks the hunters will be lead
To pass him by as something dead.

A Patient Kitty

I'VE got the nicest kitty,
As gentle as can be,
One that is always ready
To play each day with me.

I put him in my carriage
And wheel him all about,
And though I often jolt him
He never will jump out.

He always lets me dress him
Up in most anything,
And lies still in the cradle
While I rock him and sing.

He never tries to scratch me
Or act the least bit bad;
I'm sure no better kitty
A girl has ever had.

Bronze Medals of Our Presidents

DO you know that in the vaults of the U. S. mint at Philadelphia, snugly enclosed in oiled wrappings, are steel dies of medals bearing the likeness of each of the twenty-six Presidents of the United States? And President Wilson's medal is to be placed among them very shortly.

Now, no doubt, you have seen many pictures and likenesses of our various Presidents; also, you may have noticed, they are not all alike. Indeed, some of them would be taken for likenesses of entirely different persons. Naturally, Uncle Sam wants to preserve the features of each of the men who have presided at the White House, so that those who come after us may see exactly what they looked like. But, mark you, the likeness he keeps on file must be absolutely accurate in every detail.

Hence, through all the years, he has had a medal struck off of each of our Presidents very shortly after they took the oath of office. The set is complete. Not one is missing—from George Washington clear down to ex-President Taft.

Great pains were taken in the making of the dies for these medals, the most expert engraver of the time being engaged to make them of each of the successive presidents. When the First Congress of the United States met it authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, Alexander Hamilton, to see that a medal was made of George Washington; and from that day to this each Secretary of that department of Government has had a medal made of the President in whose cabinet he served.

The medal of Washington was made by an engraver named Duvivier, the most expert in all France. It is three inches in diameter and, on its obverse side bears a bust of the Father of his Country in profile, and the inscription, "George Washington, President of the United States, 1789."

On the reverse side appear two clasped hands, one that of an Indian, the other that of a colonial officer; a tomahawk and a calumet of peace, crossed; and the inscription, "Peace and Friendship." Numbers of these were struck off and given to the Indians as token of the white man's friendship for them.

The medal of President Lincoln is particularly interesting and, it is said, a remarkable likeness. It shows his rugged features in profile and bears the simple inscription, "Abraham Lincoln." On the reverse side, enclosed in a wreath of oak leaves set on branches of laurel and palm crossed, are inscribed the dates of his inauguration, his assassination and his death. Look at his likeness on the next "Lincoln penny" that comes your way and you will see a replica of the likeness of him that appears on the medal.

NO USE FOR IT.

LOUISE was a blue-eyed, golden-haired child seeing her fourth summer. Her grandpa was a churchman and a Bible reader, so the child had been told who sends the flowers, the sunshine, the rains, etc.—God. As is the custom, during dry weather the grandpa would put the hose on and sprinkle the lawn and even the street, but at this particular time there had been many days of rain.

One morning her mother pushed up the shade of a window in their bedroom and said, "Oh, Louise, the sun is shining, and the day will be fine," whereupon Louise remarked in her slow, serious manner, "Den Dod won't have his hose out today, mamma."

FRANK H. FRANCIS SHOT AND KILLED BY YOUNG COMPANION ON SUNDAY

GUN IN HANDS OF FOURTEEN YEAR OLD EUGENE RICH ACCIDENTALLY DISCHARGED.

DEATH INSTANTANEOUS

Boys Were Hunting on Prairie Three Miles East of City When Fatal Accident Happened.

On Sunday afternoon occurred the first hunting fatality of the season in the vicinity of Janesville, when Frank H. Francis, aged twenty-five, was shot and instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of Eugene Rich, aged fourteen. The entire charge in a heavy shell tore through the head of Francis, making a wicked hole, and scattering his brains, death being instantaneous, Francis dropping back without a moan.

Francis lived with his father at No. 5 Harrison street and has recently been employed in the construction of the Milwaukee street bridge. Eugene Rich is the son of Mrs. Jacob Stern, 717 Court street. The two had left the city shortly after one o'clock on a hunting trip. They had proceeded out Ruger avenue and finding game scarce had amused themselves by shooting at fence posts, corn shocks and other inanimate objects.

Reaching the Charles Hubel farm, three miles from the city, they sat down in the corn field, Francis being on one side of a corn shock and Rich on the other. A flock of geese made their appearance and Francis, without rising from his seat, fired one shot at them from the single barrel gun he was carrying. Young Rich also took a shot and in throwing open the breech of his gun, a cheap affair, to place a heavier-loaded shell in, evidently snapped the trigger and the whole charge passed through Francis' head.

Horror-stricken at the result of his carelessness, young Rich started across the fields towards the nearest house to summon aid. No one being home the youth dashed down the road toward the Godfrey farm, where he saw an automobile standing. When he arrived there he was in such a state of terror he could not intelligently make known his errand for some minutes, the men believing he had been injured himself. He managed, however, to tell of the fatal accident and the men hastened back to the field to find Francis lying just as he fell back.

Mr. Godfrey immediately notified Sheriff Whipple and District Attorney Dunwiddie and came to the city for them in his auto. The officers went to the scene of the accident, young Rich, who had somewhat regained his composure, accompanying them and being able to tell a coherent story of the accident.

Convinced it was an unavoidable accident due to carelessness in handling the weapon, or to defect in the weapon itself, young Rich was not held and the district attorney decided no inquest was necessary. The boy was brought to the city almost in a state of collapse after his experience and taken to the home of his mother.

From the position of Francis' body and the footprints in the soft soil, young Rich's story that Francis was sitting down when killed, and he was but five feet from him, were clearly proven. In loading his gun he had pointed it carelessly toward Francis and the safety pin failing to catch, the shell was exploded with fatal results.

One of the hardest tasks of the sheriff and district attorney was notifying Francis' aged parent of his son's death. The elder Francis is almost helpless from paralysis and his son was his sole support. The aged man listened with horror-stricken eyes to the story of his son's death and then broke down completely, his condition being most pitiful. The remains of Francis were brought to the city and taken to Nelson's morgue.

Aside from his father, Charles Francis, the deceased leaves to mourn his loss two sisters, Mrs. Elsie Blemish of St. Louis, and Mrs. Pearl Dickenson of Rockford; an uncle F. H. Francis, who resides on Milwaukee avenue adjoining the Charles Francis home; and a grandmother, Mrs. Caroline Carlson, and two aunts, Miss Tillie Francis and Mrs. George W. Eaton of Chicago.

COUNSEL PRESENTS CLOSING ARGUMENTS IN HARVESTER SUIT

Struggle to Dissolve International Harvester Company Begins in Federal Court at St. Paul.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

St. Paul, Nov. 3.—Opposing counsel entered the United States district court here this morning for the final struggle in the government suit to dissolve the International Harvester Company as a monopoly in violation of the Sherman law. Members of the court gathered to hear final arguments in the case filed more than a year ago.

According to announcement made this morning after the certificate and report of Special Examiner Robert S. Taylor had been returned to the court, counsel for the government will occupy the entire day and possibly a portion of tommrrow's session in the presentation of arguments. It was indicated that the brief and argument of the defense might taken even longer.

Attorney General James C. McReynolds, Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to the attorney general, and Joseph R. Darling, special agent of the department of justice, were in the city to represent the government.

The Harvester Company had on hand a formidable array of counsel, including Judge William D. McHugh of Omaha, Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, Edgar A. Bancroft, John P. Wilson, Phillip A. Post, Victor A. Reny and W. M. Stillwell, the last five being from Chicago.

Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to Attorney General McReynolds, in opening final arguments for dissolution of the International Harvester Company, before the United States district court, today asked for dissolution in such a manner as to prevent effectively a possibility of two or more of the disintegrated parts coming into ownership of companies having common stck hlders.

Mr. Grosvenor declared that the International Harvester Company is in and of itself a combination in restraint of trade in harvesting implements and a monopoly and as such proper safeguards should be made by the court to prevent a possible re-establishment of such monopoly after dissolution by the method of interlocking directorates.

Mr. Grosvenor pointed out how the supreme court had applied the standard rule of reason in nine cases decided since the established rule in the Standard Oil and tobacco decisions holding every combination unlawful that some others restrained competition and monopolized trade.

CUMMINS IS SCORED FOR HIS SPEECHES AGAINST PRESIDENT

Senator Martine Takes Iowa Senator to Task Regarding His Jersey Campaign Utterances.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Washington, Nov. 3.—Senator Martine took Senator Cummins to task today for some of the latter's speeches in the New Jersey campaign in which Mr. Cummins was quoted as having said there was "no moral difference between Huerta and the men in the White House," and having assailed "the big stick methods in connection with the tarin bill." Mr. Martine characterized the references as "absurd, ridiculous and ungenerous."

Mr. Cummins decided he had not discussed President Wilson in such a vein.

"I spoke of the office, not of the man," he said. "I did severely criticise the tendency of the executive to over-ride the legislative branch of the government."

"Does the senate mean to repeat his comparison between Huerta and President Wilson," demanded Senator Martine.

"Of course I did not say that," returntd Senator Cummins, "but I did say and I will say again that I would just as soon have my will as a member of congress overcome by an armed soldier as by any other influence from the executive. There is no difference."

Senators Owen and Williams defended the president, the former declaring that he occupied the White House with "more modesty than was usual."

Senator Williams declared that it was "slander, and calumny" to say that the president had used patronage to influence legislation and challenged any senator to prove that charge.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Concord, N. H., Nov. 3.—The final brief for Harry K. Thaw, in connection with his efforts to resist extradition from New Hampshire to New York, was field with Gov. Felker today.

The brief contends that the requisition is not in accordance with the rules of practice; that the laws of New York were violated in obtaining the indictment and that the requisition is not made in good faith.

The activity of William Travers Jerome in obtaining the indictments and his language at the hearing before Gov. Felker are attacked.

BRITISH SHIPOWNERS READY FOR OPENING OF GREAT WATERWAY

All Large Steamship Companies Have Either Added to Their Tonnage or Prepared to Do So.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

London, Nov 1.—British shipowners and merchants, in every line of produce and manufacture, have carefully laid plans for any change that will come over the trade of the world as a result of the opening of the Panama Canal.

All the big shipping companies that have interests in the countries directly benefited by the new waterway have either added to their tonnage or made preparations for doing so, and in every case it will be found that the steamers built or building are generally of the size considered most suitable for the transit of the canal. Coaling stations also are being arranged for in order that steamers using the canal may coal, if necessary, between Colon and England, and generally speaking, everything possible is being done to enable England to hold the supremacy she has attained in the world's maritime trade.

Englishmen, however, always conservative, do not believe that the revolution will be an immediate one. They are planning for a gradual expansion of trade which the ships now in existence or in prospect will be quite able to take care of. Probably one of the best authorities on this question is Major E. R. Jones, formrely American Consul at Cardiff, who for many years has been editor of "Shipping World." In a recent interview Major Jones said:

"Several of our leading British shipowners trading with the Central American states on the Pacific have built and are building ships to meet the business which the Panama route is expected to create especially between the Atlantic and Pacific. In doing this they have ignored the possibility of the granting of preferential canal tolls to American coasting tonnage using the canal. They frankly believe that the United States will never carry out this idea. Should they be right, and the tonnage ready to use the canal the first year be 10,500,000 tons and the tolls $1.25 a ton, the income will be sufficient to meet the interest charges and working expenses. Should the American coasting tonnage, however, be exempt from tolls the whole of the interest and working expenses will fall upon foreign, principally British, shipowners, and this of course would place them at a disadvantage.

"The dominating factors governing the traffic of the Panama Canal will be distances and expense; that is to say, tolls and dues, and consideration of these will often turn the scale in favor of either the Suez or the Panama route. As I have already indicated, the Panama tolls are to be $1.25 per ton. The Suez dues on ships with cargo are 8.25 francs ($1.35) at present, but ships in ballast are allowed a rebate of 2.50 francs (50) cents per ton "on full transit rate." Particulars as to charges and navigation rules for the Panama Canal are not yet published; therefore comparisons are not possible. But as far as they are known they are in favor of the Suez canal. It should be remembered also that as the profits increase the tonnage charges are reduced by the Suez. Whether this policy may be practicable after the opening of the Panama Canal, when a good deal of tonnage may be withdrawn from the Suez waterway, remains to be seen.

"Should the proposed immunity of American coasting tonnage from canal tolls be maintained and I do not think it will, then the Suez route will always get the benefit of the doubt in respect of cost and distance. This will apply to all Asiatic ports west of Japan; practically all Australian ports and Manila, yes, and many ports of New Zealand and Japan where the distance only slightly favors Panama.

"It goes without saying that, as a general proposition, the benefits of the Panama route will be greatest for the countries and centres where the distance saved is the most. It follows therefore that the American continent: Canada, the United States, Mexico, the states of Central and South America, on both oceans, and the West India Islands, will be the greatest beneficiaries.

"Of course nothing but good can come to the manufacturers and consumers of the British Isles from the abundant success of the Panama Canal. Our exports to the markets fed and favored by the canal are manufacturers; the return cargo is food supplies and raw material, so both classes will benefit. It will mean, too, a multiplication of British coaling stations, which already dot the oceans of the world, so that the mines and mine owners also will get their share of the benfits. It is said that the American government purposes an arrangement for supplying good American coal at each end of the canal at 19 shillings ($4.75) a ton. President Wilson will not, in my opinion, go beyond providing coal for American warships. And although Pocahontas coal is very good, its heat value is inferior to the steam coal of South Wales and Northumberland. Then of course there is the oil which British companies are drawing in Mexico, and are arranging to exploit Central America.

"In every sense, commercial and sentimental, it is highly desirable that the formal, official inauguration of the canal, an achievement only second to Lincoln's emancipation of the slaves, should take place in the spirit of friendliness and good will on the part of all maritime nations."

BIG MILITARY TOURNAMENT OPENED AT NEW YORK

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

New York, Nov. 3.—With clattering side arms and the rattle of steel-shod hoofs, the advance guard of the Military Tournament took possession of Madison Square Garden this morning, and with the readiness of tried campaigners, converted the big amphitheatre into a military encampment, and were in comfortable quarters in less than an hour. It is several years since a military show has been held in New York and the present exhibition, which will last all week, will include a number of new and interesting features. The new calcium shells for lighting up an enemy's advance at night will be demonstrated from the Garden roof, where a landing stage also has been built for the convenience of the army airmen who are to carry messages to and from the tournament, Governor's Island, Fort Hamilton, and other fortified places around New York.

ELECTION OUTCOME BAY STATE DUBIOUS

Seven Candidates Contesting for Governorship—Governor Eugene Foss Runs Independent.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Boston, Mass., Nov. 3.—A large question mark smybolizes the political situation in Massachusetts at the close of the annual state campaign today, and the answer of the voters to the inquiry who will be governor, which is to be decided at the election tomorrow, is awaited with an interest surpassing that felt in the Bay State in a long time.

Seven candidates are contesting for the governorship. Governor Eugene N. Foss, now finishing his third term, is seeking re-election as an independent candidate. The Republican nominee is Congressman Augustus P. Gardner, well remembered as one of the leaders of the insurgent movement against Speaker Cannon. The Democratic standard-bearer is David I. Walsh, the present lieutenant governor. Charles S. Bird, a millionaire of Walpole, who heads the Progressive ticket, completes the list of those in the running. The Prohibition, Socailist and Socialist Labor parties have named candidates, but they are not expected to figure conspicuously in the results.

The six parties have candidates for all state offices, but the Democratic and Republican parties are the only ones that have candidates in all the senate and representative districts, in some of the representative districts the Progressives have indorsed the Democratic candidates.

The independent candidacy of Governor Foss, who filed his nomination papers only an hour before the legal time limit expired, complicated the situation to such an extent as to render all forecasts of the election results little better than guesswork.

With the Republican party split, Walsh, the Democratic candidate, was generally picked as an easy winner before Foss got into the race. But it is difficult for disinterested observers to escape the conclusion that a man who has been three times elected governor by the Democratic party and who runs as an independent because he had a falling out with the party "machine," among other reasons, will not draw a large number of Democratic votes from the regular nominee of that party. It is considered likely, moreover, that many business men irrespective of party will vote for Foss because of his challenge by word and deed to organized labor.

The possibility of Foss cutting into the Democratic vote has given courage to Gardner and Bird, the Republican and Progressive candidates, respectively.

The campaign has been conducted almost wholly on the state issues. At the same time the election is of national interest, chiefly because the future of the Republican and Progressive parties must be tremendously affected by the results.

With former President Roosevelt far away from the country the ability of the Progressive party to stand alone is put to its severest test. A good showing at the polls will augur well for the future of the new party. On the other hand, a marked falling off in the Progressive vote will be interpreted far and wide as evidence of the temporary character of the third party and will have an important bearing on the situation involving the congressional campaign of next year, not to speak of the presidential contest in 1916. With a full realization of the importance of the campaign in this respect, both the Republicans and the Progressives have brought their leaders of national prominence into the contest.

If the Democrats win under the circumstances it will not be a matter of tremendous import, for the Democrats have been electing their gubernatorial ticket with considerable regularity for some years past, rock-ribbed as the Old Bay State has been supposed to be in its Republicanism.

In view of the fact that Mr. Walsh is not committed to an indorsement of President Wilson, his victory could not, therefore, be regarded as a vote of confidence for the administration, and if he is defeated the administration leaders would immedlateiy put out the statement that the defeat of Walsh was in no nsense a rebuke for the president, because national issues were not involved, but rather that it was a rebuke of the Democratic ring for refusing to indorse President Wilson.

FOREIGN DIPLOMATS WILL LEND SUPPORT

RUSSIAN, GERMAN AND NORWEGIAN MINISTERS CO-OPERATE WITH UNITED STATES.

WORD FROM CARRANZA

Emissary Arrives at Washington Today With Message From Constitutionalist Leader—Offers Complication.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Washington, Nov. 3.—Reports from John Lind, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico, concerning his recent conferences in Vera Cruz with the Russian, German and Norwegian ministers to Mexico, conveyed the impression to President Wilson today that there was a disposition on the part of those diplomats to co-operate with the United States in lending their support to the plans of the Washington government for solving the situation.

No Announcement Made.

No announcement was made here today as to any future policy. Administration officials, however, said the published stories forecasting armed intervention were not justified at this time, that there was nothing in the situation so far as the Washington administration was concerned, to warrant such an assumption.

The arrival of Roberto Posquiera, an emissary from General Carranza, the constitutionalist chief, raised the question of whether the Washington government would receive representation from the constitutionalists.

To Receive Information.

President Wilson made it clear to those who discussed the situation with him, though officially the government could not conceive any formal representation, but that, in some way or other the information which the constitutionalists desire to lay before the American government would be received.

In that connection it became known that the constitutionalists at a recent conference of chiefs decided not to ask for recognition of belligerency, but to request that there be no interference on the part of the United States in their own efforts to solve the situation by arms.

Want Embargo Removed.

The constitutionalists want the embargo on arms removed so that all factions may be supplied on an equal footing. The president has been petitioned to remove the embargo.

The understanding here is that the three diplomats at Vera Cruz sought the conference with Mr. Lind. It was made plain today that the president's envoy will not soon return to the United States as had been reported. A decision that the policy of the administration in the Mexican situation "would meet the approval of the American congress and the American people" was made in the senate today by Chairman Bacon of the foreign relations committee. Senator Bacon was speaking of a letter read into the record by Senator Bristow, who said he had received it from "a friend of thirty years standing" in Mexico.

BRICK WALL FALLS; TWO DEAD, FOUR HURT

Storehouse at Hartford, Conn., Collapses onto Frame Dwelling Early Today.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 3.—The entire side of a four-story brick storehouse in North Front street collapsed early today and crashed through the frame dwelling house of John Hughes immediately adjoining. As a result two persons are dead, three fatally injured and another seriously hurt. The dead are: John Hughes, fifty-nine, and Eva Dooley, five, his granddaughter.

The structure, a new building, was filled with bales of rags and tobacco. Michael Greenburg, its owner, said the building was dynamited, but firemen and police found no evidences of an explosion and declared that faulty construction probably caused the collapse.

All the dead and injured were sleeping when the crash came. The wall of the warehouse slipped in a diagonal direction emptying thousands of bales of rags and other goods on top of the Hughes home.

Street Car Employes Still Hold Upper Hand in Indianapolis Strike Situation.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Indianapolis, Nov. 3.—No effort was made up to noon today to resume street car service which has been tied up since Friday night by the strike of the employes of the Indianapolis Traction and Terminal Company. Although a special body of police was detailed to guard strike breakers, the crowds flocked so thickly near the street car barns that the cars were not run out.

The crowd kept orderly and quiet, but remained on watch about a block from the barn.

Bankers, merchants and professional men are to guard the streets tonight in order to let the police devote their full time to the prevention of destruction to street car property.

He had seen Mrs. Henning in the neighborhood where she lived and was familiar with the appearance of Funk whom he had seen in hotels.

Duke of Brunswick Gets Hearty Welcome From His Subjects.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Brunswick, Germany, Nov. 3.—Disagreeable weather failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the crowds here today for the state entry into Brunswick of the young Duke and Duchess of Brunswick, hitherto known as Prince Ernest August of Cumberland and Princess Victoria Louise of Prussia.

They drove from the railway station to the palace in a state coach drawn by eight horses through streets packed with people who cheered them as they passed. The procession was led and followed by troops of cavalry.

At the palace the duke, after his new courtiers had been presented, read from the steps of the throne in the presence of the members of cabinet and of the deputies a speech in which he again he asserted his loyalty to existing conditions in the German empire.

MONEY BILL FIRST, THEN TRUST MATTER

President Wilson Indicates His Attitude on Proposed Anti-Trust Legislation.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Washington, Nov. 3.—President Wilson said today he would not launch any recommendations for anti-trust legislation until the currency bill was passed and that it would be his aim to keep the currency question the center of attention. He made it plain, however, that he had some very definite ideas on the trust question which he had already discussed with Chairman Newlands of the senatt interstate commerce committee and Chairman Clayton of the house judiciary committee, as well as Attorney General McReynolds, and that all were thinking along the same lines.

"An anti-trust program armed to the peace," is the way those close to President Wilson describe his plans.

The president, they say, intends to get behind whatever measure the chairmen of the two congressional committees will work out in consultation with administration officials.

The president let it be known that he is opposed to the senate banking committee currency amendment providing for four regional reserve banks instead of twelve, as in the house currency bill.

KIEV TRIAL RESULT STOLYPIN'S POLICY

Statement in Berlin Paper Says Beiliss Case May Be Traced to Late Premier's Attitude.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Berlin, Nov. 3.—The trial of Mendel Beiliss at Kiev for the murder of Andrew Yushinsky is ascribed as due to the policy of the assassinated Russian premier Pierre A. Stolypin, in a letter signed "A Russian em-premier," appearing in today's Tageblatt and generally believed to have been written by Count Sergius Witte.

Stolypin, the writer asserts, endeavored to divert popular attention from breaches of the Russian constitution and from non-fulfillment of the emperor's manifesto of 1905 by inventing the "modern nationalism" designed to rob all non-Orthodox Russians and particularly those of the Jewish religion of their rights.

The investigators of the Beiliss accusation are, he says, insignificant individuals, former co-workers with Stolypin.

BOULDER ON TRACK CAUSES BAD WRECK

C. B. & Q. Train Derailed Near Genoa, Wis., and Several Persons Badly Hurt.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

La Crosse, Nov. 3.—Passenger train No. 58 on the C. B. & Q. railroad, which left here at 11 o'clock last night, was wrecked near Genoa, Wis., at 12:12 this morning when the locomotive struck a boulder half the size of a box car which had been dislodged by recent rains and rolled down the bluff onto the track.

Engineer James M. Pratt, La Crosse, was possibly fatally injured. His jaw was broken and one side of his face crushed in. Four Italian track laborers and one negro porter were also injured, not fatally, and are being cared for at Genoa by physicians who went down on the wrecking train.

First reports of the accident received here were that the wrecked train was the Oriental limited, the coast train which runs a little behind No. 58. The coast train, however, was not harmed and met no handicaps other than several hours delay. No. 58 is also a first class train and faster than the Oriental limited.

While engaged in directing and clearing up of the wreck, Thomas Huntley, superintendent of the wrecking crew, fell off a bridge and sustained broken ribs and internal injuries. He was brought to a hospital in La Crosse critically injured. Late advices from the hospital are that Engineer Pratt will probably die.

CALUMET SITUATION TO BE ACTED UPON

Representative McDonald of Michigan States That Future Strikes Must Be Prevented.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Representative McDonald of Michigan told President Wilson today that something should be done either through executive action or legislation not only to adjust the copper strike in the Calumet region, but to prevent future strikes which involve the prosperity of an immense industry.

President Wilson expressed deep interest and said he would study the subject. The federal mediation board, it was agreed, could not take up the strike because of the limitations under which it works, but the president expressed the hope that some plan might be soon adopted to meet the situation.

TALK MEANS OF SOLVING HIGH COST OF LIVING FARE

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Excelsior Springs, Mo., Nov. 3.—More vegetables on the menu and not so many meats as a means of solving the high cost of living was one of the proposals discussed by the Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma Hotel Men's Association at the opening session of its convention here today. According to Barney Alisky of Kansas City, secretary of the association, it is the elaborate list of meats served in hotels that keeps the price of meat up and many patrons who order meat would prefer something else if they could get it.

The convention will be in session two days and according to Mr. Alisky will take decisive action affecting the high cost of living before adjournment. About four hundred delegates attended.

FIND MAGGIE KNIGHT IN ABANDONED SHED ON FARM NEAR CITY

FOOTVILLE WOMAN REMAINS UNCONSCIOUS FOR FIVE DAYS IN DESERTED OUT. BUILDING.

CERTAIN OF RECOVERY

Physicians Confident She Will Live in Spite of Exposure to Cold Without Food or Drink.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Footville, Nov. 3.—The condition of Maggie Knight, who was found late Saturday afternoon in an abandoned shed on the Joseph Fisher farm on the Hanover road, three miles south of Janesville, is reported much improved today in spite of the terrible exposure, and physicians say that she will probably be able to be up in several days.

For five days the woman remained in a deserted cornerib and according to her own story was unconscious during the entire time. She wore but a light calico dress and summer-weight underwear. She had only the cold, damp ground for a bed and nothing for covering. That she lived to tell the experience is remarkable and is due, no doubt, in part, to her unsound mental condition.

The Knight woman was found by Corrine Acheson and Merle Brown, two small girls, the former being the daughter of Robert Acheson, who resides on the Fisher farm. They were attracted by the woman's cries when she recovered consciousness and at once summoned aid. In a pitable plight, lips and face swollen and purple from exposure to cold and lack of water, the sick woman was taken to the Acheson home where she was later identified by Patrick Conway, a former Footville man, who lives at the home of Michael Finley.

The relatives at Footville were at once notified and medical aid was summoned. John Fox drove out from Footville in his car accompanied by Mrs. Art. Jones and Miss Mamie Knight, a sister. Although it was feared Saturday night that the woman would not live, it was thought best to remove here to her home at Footville. She was unconscious soon after she was taken to the Acheson home until Sunday.

Her mind apparently clear, Miss Knight was able to tell her experience in a sane and collected manner today. "You know I am subject to these spells," she told her mother, Mrs. Kate Knight, in explanation of her disappearance.

The Fisher farm is some six or seven miles from Footville. The girl left home last Monday about supper time and wandered through the rain and darkness until she came to this deserted cornerib, which stands some distance from the other buildings on the Fisher place. She told today of seeking shelter in this old shed. Her clothes were soaking wet, she said, and she was tired. She took off her shoes and stockings and wrung the water out of her clothing, which is the last she remembers until she regained consciousness on Saturday. She was very thirsty and called out to the two girls to bring her a drink of water. She remembered nothing after she was taken to the Acheson home.

That the woman could remain for nearly a week in the building without discovery, is accounted for by the fact that the shed in which she took refuge is an old one, practically never used. It stands near the road but the door had been closed so that persons passing on the highway did not discover the fact that the shed held an occupant.

Searching parties had been hunting the entire western part of the county all week for the missing girl and her mother and other relatives were nearly frantic. Her mental condition has been unsound for some time past and only last summer she was brought home from the county asylum, her relatives wishing to take care of her themselves. It is probable she will be taken back after her recovery from her recent experience, as her care is too great a strain for her mother.

She was suffering with a high fever today, which the physicians stated was nothing alarming. She had no desire for food but has taken nourishment quite frequently, so that her condition, though serious, is not critical.

"WITHIN THE LAW" IS HIGH CLASS DRAMA

Bayard Veiller's Great Modern Day Production Proves Sensation Before Packed House.

Miss Jane Gordon, taking the leading role, that of Mary Turner, in Bayard Veiller's masterful drama "Within the Law," at the Myers Theatre Saturday afternoon and evening proved the biggest hit of the season, before one of the largest audiences on record at a high priced production. The matinee was well attended, while in the evening, there was scarcely an empty seat throughout the main floor, or balcony. The gallery was crowded to its capacity.

The play is set in the heart of New York City, where the crowded metropolis is always the scene of light pickpockets, or thieves. The play to a certain extent is a real story of everyday life, although it points out more in detail the real sense of justice to that of law, stating, that the courts of today are courts of law and not courts of justice. Wilson Reynolds, as Edward Gilder, proprietor of a metropolitan department store, in the eastern city, took his position very sternly, and he catered especially to the rich, while his own working girls, earning but six dollars per week, would be treated like slaves. A plea in act one, by Jane Gordon, set many in the audience to tears.

Miss Eileen Wilson, as Agnes Lynch, spread humor throughout the four acts, using many favorite slang expressions which brought forth much applause.

William Lambert, taking the part of the criminal, Joe Garson, treated his subject with all of the charracter that was necessary. His appearance in act four, showing his stage of nervous prostration, after killing Inspector Burke's stool pigeon, was pitiful, until he made his confession, thereby freeing Mary Turner and her husband, Edward Gilder's son, Richard, who were married following her freedom from prison.

Every character in the production was good. There was no flaw found in its rendering, and the drama was met by everyone with approval.

The play is about one year old, and has been played with great success in New York and Chicago, this summer. While Margaret Illington, the star leader, acting as Mary Turner, in the original company, was not here, her place was well filled by Jane Gordon, an actress with enviable reputation.

JACK BESSEY PLAYS PROVE POPULARITY

Jack Bessey has certainly earned the title of Janesville's favorite actor, as all those who attended the Myers Theatre will testify. Who else could have drawn such an immense crowd and packed the house to the doors from pit to dome as he did last night. He's got the secret and keeps it well, whatever it is. He never loses his popularity, his show never weakens, in fact it seems to be better every year. If the rest of the plays are anywhere near as good as the opening bill, "The Reformer," the ought to make a barrel of money this season. It is by far the best performance he has ever given on the local boards, exceeding in numerous points many of the one night stand attractions.

As Tom Rawson, Jack came nearer to perfection than anything he has attempted. His voice, his appearance, his heart and soul all seemed to be wrapped up in the part, and to see his work is well worth $2.00 of anybody's money. He was ably supported by Nell Paul, who made herself very popular last season. As the stenographer, Helen King, she certainly contributed her share to the success of the performance. Ira Herring gave an excellent interpretation of Dr. James Lynch. Adelaide Melnotte again pleased her many friends by her clever work, the company would not be complete without her. Joe H. Harris handled the part of Nathaniel Rawson, the father, in a very capable manner. Sam Waldon was very good as the brother, Dick. Among the others who deserve special mention are Fred F. Parker, the editor, Myrtle Reeves and Mabelle Waldon.

Tonight Mr. Bessey will present a four act comedy drama "The Woman in Question," which is one of the best plays of its kind he has ever had.

WORKS ALL DAY
And Studies at Night on Grape-Nuts Food.

Some of the world's great men have worked during the day and studied evenings to fit themselves for greater things. But it requires a good constitution generally to do this.

A Ga. man was able to keep it up with ease after he had learned the sustaining power of Grape Nuts, although he had failed in health before he changed his food supply. He says:

"Three years ago I had a severe attack of stomach trouble which left me unable to eat anything but bread and water.

"The nervous strain at my office from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M., and improper foods caused my health to fail rapidly. Cereal and so-called "Foods" were tried without benefit until I saw Grape-Nuts mentioned in the paper.

"In hopeless desperation I tried this food and at once gained strength, flesh and appetite. I am now able to work all day at the office and study at night, without the nervous exhaustion that was usual before I tried Grape-Nuts.

"It leaves me strengthened, refreshed, satisfied; nerves quieted and toned up, body and brain waste restored. I would have been a living skeleton, or more likely a dead one by this time, if it had not been for Grape-Nuts.

TRAMWAY EXTENDED ACROSS THE RIVER

Carrying Rock and Gravel from Excavation for East Abutment to Fill Up Void of First Arch.

Although street cars will not be able to cross the river for a month or more, a tramway is now in operation across its entire width, the extension being made so that rock and gravel excavated on the site of the east bank abutment might be used to fill in the void of the first arch extending out from the west bank. The clam-shell drops its burden directly into the dump car. Its usefulness past, the elevated tramway extending from the east bank to near the corner of Milwaukee and Main street, has been taken down. The huge pile of earth deposited beneath it will be used to fill in the arches of the bridge after they are constructed.

The footings for the center pier have been finished and a centrifugal pump was placed today to reduce the water level in the cofferdam so that the workmen can cut off the piling. A new crownsheet has been placed in the boiler of the engine which is to operate it to replace the one which was blown out one night last week. As soon as the piling are sawed off the pier can be poured up to the spring line and before the end of the week the second arch can be poured.

SUCCESSFUL ROOT AND HERB REMEDY.

The study of roots and herbs, their character and power over disease, was what led Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass., to produce for woman's ills the most successful remedy the world has ever known, and while she passed to her reward some years ago, her work among suffering women is still carried on by trained assistants and many tons of roots and herbs are consumed annually in the manufacture of the now famous Lydia E. MRS. WORRY. FOUND AT LAST! A USE FOR THOSE QUILLS.

SPORT Snap-Shots

BY MORRIS MILLER

Ira Thomas, the Athletic catcher, is getting rich at this world's series business. In the last seven years Thomas has been in five different world's championship contests and in that time has made something like $11,817.23 from his share of the world's series money alone. Thomas while a mighty reliable backstop has never been regarded as a phenomenal catcher and yet he has managed to be present almost every time when there was any extra change being handed out. In 1907 when the Tigers won their first pennant Thomas was there and waiting for his little share and he knocked down all told $1,945.63. The season following Detroit lost to the Cubs, but just the same Ira got his part of the loser's end, which amounted to something like $910, worth carrying home with him, anyway. In 1909 Thomas did'nt come in for any of the velvet, not being with the Tigers that season, but he went to the Athletics in 1910 and got something in the neighborhood of $2,062.74 for his services that season in the big show. The season following, while still with the Athletics, he chopped off a measly $3,654.58. The Athletics languished in 1912 and Ira didn't come in for his usual rake-off. But this season they were there again and Thomas got $3,300. All of this pure velvet, mind you, and a very acceptable little salary all the time besides. If this thing continues Ira will be able to buy out the baseball business and have world's series all the time.

Ollie Chill, the pugilist-ump., is going to officiate in the American league next season. Chill, who is one of the best umpires in the country, has been held back for some while for the simple reason that he used to be a boxer. Big league managers and officials thought that he might be too scrappy for that reason and would be able to keep peace and quiet among the players. But Chill's work in the American association was so good last season that Ban Johnson signed him up for 1914. Chill, far from being scrappy on the diamond, is mild and retiring and is mighty well liked by all the players. Also he is respected by most all the players. Only once in his career as an umpire has Ollie had a fight on the ball field and that was a couple of years ago in St. Louis, when Frank Delehanty tried to swat Ollie on the beezer. Delehanty didn't try very much after the first swing. Chill is said to have thrashed him soundly.

If baseball fans took all the rumors seriously that ever and anon float across the sport pages they would soon be going into the advanced stages of neuresthenia. The latest one to claim public notice is the report that Frank "Homerue"

Baker may quit the game. Franklin has an idea that he would like to take up a business career and while he is not yet quite sure what sort of business he would like to go into he has quite a hankering for the life of a business man. When Connie Mack was asked about this thing he said that he had heard nothing from Baker about it and didn't seem inclined to take the matter very much to heart. Apparently Connie feels that the chances of Baker's quitting the game for a few years yet are slim indeed. "I feel pretty sure," said Cornelius, "that Baker will appear with the Athletics all right next season. Of course if he should insist upon quitting there would be nothing for me to do but try and fill his place." Which would be our idea of quite a good deal to do.

COMMENT ON EDLER'S WORK AT LAWRENCE

Beloit College Students Have Word of Praise for Their Mighty Halfback—Is But a Freshman.

Several students from Beloit College have been heard say that Edler, halfback on the Line City college eleven this fall, should be used more in the games by Coach Evans than he really is. The work of Edler this year has been nothing short of marvelous. He has had little trouble in gaining a place on the second set of backs, and largely because he knows the game from A to Z. His four years' work previous to this year on the Janesville high school eleven perhaps gave him more experience than he would have gained otherwise.

Coach Evans allowed him to enter the game last Saturday against Lawrence in the second quarter, but soon took him out to give way to the other regulars. The students are somewhat dissatisfied, because they feel that if Edler had remained in the game longer than he did there might have been a different story to tell regarding the outcome.

In the account of the game at Appleton it mentions Edler as making several spectacular runs, one run being for only ten yards, but through the entire Lawrence eleven, with no interference.

WILL PLAY OPENING GAME FOR EASTERN TITLE ON SATURDAY

Elevens of Harvard and Princeton versities to Meet—Princeton Conceded Advantage.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

New York, Nov. 2.—The opening game of the so-called eastern football championship series will be played at Princeton, N. J., on Saturday, when the elevens of Harvard and Princeton Universities meet in their annual combat. This will be the seventeenth contest between the teams of the two institutions since 1877, when the Tigers and Crimson first mingled on the football field. There have been a number of breaks in the series between Princeton and Harvard, and at present the score stands Princeton, 13 victories, 4 defeats. Harvard, 4 victories, 13 defeats. Opening with two games in 1877, the colleges played annual games until 1889. In 1895 the series was renewed and continued for two years, and was then abandoned until the autumn of 1911. Since then the play has been continuous so that next Saturday's game may be considered the third of the present cycle.

Judging from the form displayed by the two elevens which are to clash in the most important game of the east this week, Harvard should be a slight favorite, but Princeton adherents point to the peculiar fact that the Crimson has not defeated the Orange and Black on the Tigers' home field in many years. As a result a tradition has sprung up in Princeton to the effect that Harvard cannot win from Princeton at Princeton anymore than it can defeat Yale in the Cambridge stadium. The Crimson cohorts hope to shatter both these traditions this year, but should the Tigers win on Saturday, faith in the ability of Harvard to defeat Yale in the coming game at Cambridge will receive a severe setback.

So far as football pioneer activity and traditions are concerned, Princeton has a decided advantage over Harvard for the Tigers were on the gridiron several years ahead of the Crimson, and have made football history which needs no apology when compared with that of Harvard, now carefully guarded in musty tomes at Cambridge. Princeton football dates back to 1869, when, aided by Rutgers, the Tigers put American Intercollegiate football in the category of United States college sports. For more than forty-four years Princeton has played football each season, and the total number of games run into surprising figures. Her record to date shows 347 games, of which 300 have been won and 35 lost and 12 tied. Harvard inaugurated football at Cambridge in 1874, and to date has played exactly the same number of games as Princeton, but not with the same success. Of he 347 games, 291 have been won; 47 lost, and 9 tied.

Feat of Ouimet.

Despite the rather erratic play of Francis Ouimet since the youthful Massachusetts golfer won the United States open championship by defeating both Ray and Vardon in the sensational extra round at Brookline, the orable game continue to discuss the remarkable feat from many angles. Owing to the exciting scenes attendant upon the final two days of the tornament many interesting sidelights the least of these was he activity of the American and foreign newspaper corps sent to report what was without doubt the greatest golf tornament ever held in the new world. The correspondents working at top speed in the mist, rain and mud, made some records themselves, although these were not given the same amount of publicity that followed Ouimet's victory.

While the young American golfer was busy overturning British golfing traditions, the correspondents were equally busy in establishing another news handling record for a golf event in the little press room at The Country Club. More than a quarer of a million words were sent over the wires, and 26,000 by cable to London and Edinburg during the five days of play. It required some lively work on the part of the golf writers to cover the field, and some amusing incidents occurred. One visiting English correspondent will probably remember the event for some years.

When Vardon holed his putt on the 72d green on Friday, tying Ray for first place, the Englishman strolled into the press room and confidently sent a cable announcing that Vardon and Ray had vanquished the Yankee field and would have a little match Saturday to see which would carry back the title. Ouimet at the time was out in the "slough of despond" on the 11th hole and appeared to be impossible as a winner. British golfing supremacy lasted nearly three-quarters of an hour, or until Ouimet holed his long putt for a 3 on the 71st green.

It is a good 449-yard run from the green to the club house, and the English correspondent did it close to Olympic figures, but the dispatch was already well past London and on its way to Calcutta, Hong Kong and Melbourne. The next day the Englishman waited until Ouimet had sunk his last putt on the final green before announcing the new champion. But again he was beaten, for another foreign correspondent had flashed the winner, when Vardon and Ray drove into the rough from the eighteenth tee, while Ouimet with four strokes in his bag stood alone behind a perfect line in the center of the fair green, waiting for his already beaten opponents to play the "odd."

Numerous Field Trials.

The admirer of the field dog in active competition is at the present moment riding his hobby at top speed, for field trials are being held in all parts of the United States and Canada. Large acreage has been leased in various sections, and reports from the secretaries of the various meets report an abundance of game and large entry lists. Purses ranging from $500 to $1,000 await awarding, and as the competition for these prizes promises to be unusually close the breeders of field dogs and the gunner, who believes that shooting over a perfectly trained pointer and retriever is one of the best features of the sport, is prparing to spend as many days as possible this autumn tramping over turf and through brush behind the field dogs and their judges.

That he will have plenty of opportunities to satisfy his desire in this direction is shown by the long schedule of trials already carded for autumn and coming winter.

Among the more important field events are that to be decided within the next few months are the following: Southern Ohio Field Trials, opening today near Norwood, Ohio; American Field Futurity at Hutsonville, Ill., next Thursday; Independent Field Trials over the same course on November 10; Georgia Field Trials at Waynesboro, Ga., November 24; International trials at Windsor, Ont., four days earlier; Continental trials at Waynesboro, Ga., December 1; Virginia-Carolina trials Chase City, Va., December 2; Pointer Club trials same course, December 7; Southern trials, Lotohatchie, Ala., December 8; National Club trials same course, December 15; United States trials, Grand Junction, Tenn., January 5-14; All American trials, Roger Spring, Tenn., January 12; and National Championships, Grand Junction, Tenn. January 19.

BIG BATTLES SHOW STRENGTH OF TEAMS

Wisconsin Trail Minnesota, Yale Disgraced by Colgate, Harvard Has Easy Victory, Maroons Strong.

Saturday's football battles showed nmerous supposedly strong teams woefully weak and the race for the titles narrowed down to only a few teams. Wisconsin went down in a freak battle beneath the prowess of the Minnesota eleven by a bad trouncing of 21 to 3. The conference champs and their aspirations were suddenly buried by the gophers and at no time after Bellows booted his easy goal, did the Cardinals show form enough to penetrate Minnesota's defense for game winning runs. Fumbles were many and cost Wisconsin a close score by allowing the gophers to score two distressing touchdowns. When Tanberg was injured the state eleven slumped in their fighting spirit and when the second half came, the visitors tore them to shreds.

Chicago showed her championship qualities by bumping the sturdy Illinois eleven under Zuppke 28 to 7. Illinois started strong and made affairs decidedly interesting for the Maroons at the start, but when Coach Stagg's team work got into action and warmed up, the Urbana boys crumbled and were busy chasing "Dolly" Grey, Captain Norgren and Pierce.

These two struggles had direct connection in settling the "big nine" tut and the winners will have a battle royal in settling the dispute. Michigan Aggies, the champs of the west, routed Buchtel 41 to 0 and had an easy time doing it. Indiana narrowly escaped defeat against Ohio state 7 to 6 and showed lack of football enough to demonstrate their weakness compared to the Maroons or Minnesota. Michigan held up the honor of the west by downing Syracuse 43 to 7.

In the East.

Yale, the team who for years has had championship teams bowed down to humble defeat before Colgate, a small college, and Yale spirit was smeared all over with disgrace by the 16 to 6 score. The blue eleven was outplayed at all stages and the little Colgate team battered Old Eli's line in a manner that previols Yale teams gained fame against Harvard, Princeton and the old Army and Navy teams.

Notre Dame showed the easterners showed western class by ripping the Army to pieces and romping away with the battle by a 35 to 13 score. This victory must have made the famous and high-priced eastern college coaches sit up and take notice. Open fotoball baffled the Army men and showed that football brains have a home in the west.

Harvard with a crippled eleven, without Hahan and Brickley, haf of the game took things easy and outclassed the big Cornell team 23 to 6. The Harvard team look good to give any team in the country a bad trimming with ease. Haughton, their coach, has perfected a wonderful football mochine for the Crimson school. Carlisle, Princeton, Navy and Pennsylvania defeated their opponents by large scores. Penn. college had their hands full in subduing the Penn. university, winning by a 17 to 0 score by the blunders of their opponents.

In the State.

Beloit, who was billed to clash with Ripon in the schedule took a small portion of their soreness for losing to Lawrence out on the weak Northwestern college of Naperville, Illinois by a 48 to 0 score.

Lawrence and Marquette, after a week's wrangling, clashed and fought might and main for a victory but the score stood 14 to 14, both teams claiming the honor of showing the other up. Ripon and Carroll battled to a 6 to 6 tie at Ripon, the game being in Ripon's favor except for ten minutes of the first quarter, when a forward pass sent the tieing score across from the twenty-five yard line. Ripon looks good to make Beloit develop "a foot," as Coach Evans stated Lawrence would have a week ago against his Beloit team.

HIGH SCHOOL MENTOR SADLY DISCOURAGED

Coach Curtis Claims His Squad Failed to Play Real Football Against Jefferson—Team Was Slow.

Lack of fast, snappy, offensive work in the contest last Saturday morning, during the critical moments, when a score would have tied the count, the local high school football eleven took a disgraceful defeat at the hands of Jefferson. Perhaps the crowd is to blame, for their enthusiasm shown in the last ten seconds of play, perhaps the team couldn't hear the signals, or perhaps the lack of confidence to put the ball over, was the cause. At any rate, there was something radically wrong. Straight football would have won for Janesville, but for the slowness in getting off plays. Coach Curtis is discouraged over the outcome. With a team as inexperienced as Jefferson, who were being outplayed every minute of the game by Janesville, it seems hardly possible that the defeat came as it did. Even Jefferson admitted that the locals should have won.

Dalton was the hardest worked man in the game. He was always fighting, always trying to make it first down. And he generally succeeded. A straight play by him in those last few seconds would have ended the fracas with a tie score, with an easy goal to kick.

Stewart, right end, was under all tackles which came his way. He played a star game throughout. Dearborn and Atwood lacked the aggressiveness, due largely to their poor interference, which the eleven exhibited. Hayes played a good defensive game, and on offense he made some substantial gains, but his work at running the team was far below his class shown in the previous games.

The line was steady, and they played together. Badger was a great man in making holes for Dalton to go through. McVicar, Jones, Smiley, Mouat and McCulloch were playing with vim at all times, but when the team fell the defeat came and the school became dead for want of school spirit. No game this Saturday on account of the teachers' convention Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this wtek.

REPUBLIC OF PANAMA IS TEN YEARS OF AGE

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Panama, Nov. 3.—The Republic of Panama today began celebrations in honor of the tenth anniversary of its independence from Colombia. With the water already turned into Culebra Cut and the final completion of the great canal in sight, the celebration will be carried through the entire week and is expected to be more brilliant than in any previous year. Today was observed as a public holiday by all classes. Crowds of Americans joined in the festivities with as much enthusiasm as was displayed by the native residents of the republic.

TRUSTS AND COMBINES.

In this age of concentration, where efficiency is the watchword, combinations of capital and energy are of frequent occurrence, and monopoly is the natural result. The notion has become popular that all monopolies are corrupt and burdensome, and so our law-makers, both state and national, seek to curb and regulate, in the interests of public welfare.

The federal government created a new office, a time ago, and the new administration filled it by appointing Joseph E. Davies of Madison as commissioner of corporations. The duties are to study industrial conditions and their relations to organized capital, with a view to securing safe and sane legislation.

Mr. Davies made his maiden speech before the National Association of Hardware Manufacturers at Atlantic City last Friday. He laid down the principle that it is possible to "bust trusts" without stopping industrial development and freedom. He said President Wilson's mind is still open on the trust question, but that he is backing the bureau of corporations investigation "with a view to establishing the best possible industrial system in the United States."

The program of the next session of congress will deal largely with trust questions, Davies said, but whether it will advocate destruction or control of monopoly will rest with the determination of the question, "Does monopoly or competition afford the fairest, best system for all the people?"

Monopoly's vast hold on the country was depicted by Davies in figures showing that 200 corporations, owning $22,500,000,000, have come into existence in the last fifteen years. This means 200 artificial persons, one tenthousandth of 1 per cent of the natural persons of this country, own three times as much wealth as the entire country owned in 1850, he said.

"The so-called trust problem," said Davies, "is nothing more or less than the problem of what shall be the just, fair, and scientific attitude of government, in the interests of society, toward industry and business in its present stage of evolution."

"What shall be done to preserve freedom of opportunity for business is the problem congress will address itself to in the immediate future," he declared. "The efficiency of an industrial system will be finally gauged by the people, in a large measure, by the difference in the cost of what they buy."

Answering claims that it is impossible to crush monopoly, Davies said: "Because a condition exists is not conclusive that it is the result of fundamental natural and economic laws. Civilization would be a lie if after bringing these institutions into being it could not deflect their power so they would not become a Frankenstein to destroy the liberties of men."

Davies called upon the country's business men for co-operation in the investigation and said in conclusion that the government seeks only an industrial freedom based on efficiency, justice, forbearance, so "our children shall be men, not slaves to an industrial hierarchy or a governmental despotism."

The address throughout was a conservative statement of conditions as they appear to the mind of a reformer, with no very well defined ideas of a remedy for an evil which may or may not exist.

The statement that two hundred corporations, owning some twenty-two billions in property, represent "artificial persons," would seem at first flush a little startling, but the thought comes back that these corporations are simply the agents and servants of a great army of stockholders who are in no sense "artificial."

The spirit of regulation and control, just now so dominant, magnifies conditions, and in directing attention to "big business," and the rapid strides which it has made through intelligent co-operation, overlooks the fact that general prosperity has prevailed, and that while large fortunes have accumulated, the rank and file have gleaned to advantage.

It is well to remember, in these piping times of reform, that fifty-two per cent of the American voters are taxpayers, while seventy-five per cent are providing for a rainy day through savings banks or life insurance.

Not a bad record, in spite of calamity howlers and political reformers, who seek to array the masses against the classes, through odious comparisons.

The American people would be destitute of a grievance today, if let alone, and by the same token the business of the country, both large and small, would jog along without a murmur.

What the country needs is less regulation and more encouragement, on the part of public servants elected to serve, and not to annoy.

ONE MISTAKE.

Already the democrats are discovering mistakes in their recent tariff law that bids fair to either make or break the democratic party. It was not until after the bill had been passed, had been signed and become a law, that President Wilson or his advisors really recognized the error they had made by the five per cent clause in the law. Then the mistake was pointed out to the President by the newspaper men at their Monday morning conference at the White House. President Wilson seemed much surprised at the first intimation he had of the possible result of the particular clause and it is now intimated that in December congress will seek to remedy it. The Christian Science Monitor says that it is reported with seeming authority that when congress shall meet in regular session in December, President Wilson will communicate to it a recommendation that the 5 per cent preferential clause in the new tariff law be nullified by legislative action. It is nullified at present by executive order, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo having suspended its operation. The state department, also, has gone on record against it. The understanding is that Attorney General McReynolds will confirm the action already taken and that his opinion will accompany the President's message on the subject. Apparently it has proved impossible for the administration to reach any other conclusion than that the clause could not be made operative without involving the government in serious complications. Goods brought to the United States in American bottoms, that is, could not be granted a discount denied to goods brought in other vessels without upsetting existing commercial treaties with several nations, and among these some of the most important.

The motive prompting the insertion of the clause was that it might operate to encourage the employment of American bottoms in ocean commerce, and thereby assist in the restoration of the nation's merchant marine. By giving a special discount to all merchandise shipped in American vessels, so it was figured, capital would be encouraged through an increased demand for the service of these vessels to engage in the construction of American ships. Thus a languishing industry would be revived. But the fact that treaties existed between the United States and certain other countries, in which both parties to the contract were obligated to give each other all preferences granted the "most favored nation," was lost sight of. It is apparent now that there must be no discrimination against the treaty nations or all tariff duties must be scaled down 5 per cent, thus making the present low rates still lower and involving a loss to the revenues, or the tariff law must be amended so that no provision contained in it can be interpreted to impair the treaty or treaty rights of any nation having commercial relations with the United States. The latter is presumably the course that will be taken.

In the meantime the statesmanship of the day, as this newspaper has heretofore held in this connection, should seek some direct means of promoting the rehabilitation of the merchant marine. If it be a worthy thing to do, indirect methods of doing it should not be encouraged.

Just for England's attitude on the Mexican question we shall refuse to be sorry the next time a flying wedge of suffragists connects with a member of the British ministry.

CONSIDER SEVERAL FACTORY PROPOSALS

Commercial Club Directors Are Investigating Two Promising Concerns.

The directors of the Commercial club, with President James S. Fifield in the chair, met at the Grand hotel this noon and took up the matter of the possible location of a motorcycle factory here.

A committee appointed at a former meeting to carry on preliminary investigation reported and the proposition seemed to favorably impress those who heard the report. Another committee will journey to Chicago this week to look into the proposition further, and if it meets up with the present opinion of its qualifications a public audit will be made of the concern, and it is quite likely a canvass will be made for a fund sufficient to bring it here.

In addition to the regular attendance at the meeting were Jos. Weber, M. O. Monat, E. A. Bingham and Frank Croak. Nothing of further importance came before the meeting.

MILTON COLLEGE FACULTY ENTERTAINS FOR STUDENTS

Hallowe'en Party Enjoyed at College Auditorium on Saturday Evening.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Milton, Nov. 3.—Saturday night the faculty of Milton College entertained the students at a Hallowe'en party at the college auditorium. The scene of the festivities was seasonably decorated with jack-o'-lanterns, shocks of corn, and other appropriate ornaments, and the faculty and their guests were arrayed in the ghostly garb suitable to the occasion.

The first even was a dead-march in single fire, after which masks were removed and the guests participated in various athletic "stunts," which were extremely amusing. There were also several clever fortune-telling devices and a "Chamber of Horrors" where the victims, after being led through a maze of hair-raising scares, were shown gruesome visions of their past, present and future. Perhaps the most popular diversions, however, were "shooting the chutes" and throwing tennis balls at the Devil's mouth for sticks of candy.

When the company had enjoyed these various amusements to the full they were served with a delicious Hallowe'en supper, and departed with the feeling that the faculty were royal entertainers.

Bentz-Zanzinger.

The wedding of Miss Ida C. Bentz and Otto J. Zanzinger was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents on Wednesday, Oct. 29, the Rev. Zimmer reading the marriage service. The bride was attired in a gown of blue messaline and was attended by Miss Josephine Bentz, who wore a gown of green messaline. The groom was attended by his brother, John Zanzinger. Mrs. Herman Lipke presided at the organ. The home was prettily decorated in white and green. A sumptuous wedding dinner was served. Mr. and Mrs. Zanzinger will reside on the farm owned by the groom's father near Milton.

RHEUMATIC PAINS PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Relief Comes After Taking Few Doses of Croxone.

It is needless to suffer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and the only way to overcome it is to remove the cause.

Croxone does this because it neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys so they can filter the poison from the blood, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is a truly remarkable medicine for rheumatism, kidney troubles and bladder disorders. You will find it differs from other remedies. There is nothing else just like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it without results. Relief follows the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle and all druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarante. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

TO ORDER NUMEROUS SEWER CONNECTIONS MADE NEXT SEASON

Mayor Fathers Aims to Improve Sanitary Conditions of City in Spring.—Health Officer Reports.

Scores, if not hundreds of property owners will be ordered to connect their buildings with sewers next spring according to a statement made by Mayor Fathers this morning. Connections will probably be required on all streets where sewers have been laid and all outside closets declared nuisances and ordered removed. According to the report of City Health Officer Dr. S. B. Buckmaster for the month of October, just filed with the city clerk, an assistant inspector employed for twenty days, listed no less than 1529 outhouses, all of which must sometime be abolished. Not a few were found in the downtown and business district. The health officer remarks that with such a number it would not be surprising if we had more sickness than has developed.

"The health of the city has continued good," says Dr. Buckmaster, "and we have been especially fortunate in escaping contagious diseases. At the end of the month there was but one card up in the city, a case of diphtheria in an adult. This is very gratifying when we consider that not a child in the city is ill at this time with a contagious disease, the schools having been in session for two months, and it is to be hoped that we may continue to be thus spared, though it is scarcely to be expected for a very long period.

"Many complaints have been investigated and conditions improved as much as possible. Forty-four rooms were fumigated by me where there had been cases of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, chicken-pox, diphtheria and scarlet fever; in several cases the outhouses were disinfected also.

"As registrar of vital statistics I report the following certificates received endorsed and forwarded to the state board of health at Madison after two copies of each had been made, one copy to be filed in my office and one (except accidents) given to the register of deeds for filing at the court house: marriages 31, births 29, deaths 17, accidents 10, supplementary 1, a total of 108. Several other supplementary reports were received, but amendments were made by me before certificates had to be forwarded.

"The large number of marriage certificates returned do not indicate that an undue number have embarked upon the matrimonial sea during the month, but is due to the fact that a large part of these certificates, dating back for some time, had not been forwarded to me by those officiating at the ceremony within the specified time.

"Of the deaths 2 were from diseases of the heart, 2 sudden cause not certainly known, 3 killed by railway trains, 1 from nephritis, 1 from typhoid fever, 1 from cancer of gall bladder, 1 from marasimus, 1 from ruptured appendix, 1 from bronchopneumonia, and 1 from chronic inanitation. Total 17, of whom 3 were aged between 75 and 80, 1 between 80 and 85, and 3 over 85. For all of these and a number from the country burial permits were issued by me.

Respectfully submitted.

Daniel Frohman presents

HENRY E. DIXEY

Supported by Laura Sawyer and House Peters in an original drama of the underworld

"CHELSEA 7750"

Henry E. Dixey is one of the foremost favorites of the American stage. In the role of an eminent, able and conscientious detective, Mr. Dixey is afforded ample opportunity to utilize the fine powers of characterization for which he is noted. The play sounds every depth of the underworld, its secrets, its methods and its emotions, and penetrates the intricate labyrinths of the submerged half. Startling revelations, ingenious machinations, and overwhelming climaxes crowd fast in thrilling succession; and through it all the mystery and fascination of the world that lives under cover.

Performances at 2:30 and 4, 10c; at 7:30 and 9, 20c for adults and 10c for children.

The third of the Famous Players series, following "Tess" and "In the Bishop's Carriage."

Following this will appear Lillie Langtry in "His Neighbor's Wife," Laura Sawyer in "An Hour Before Dawn," and James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

SENTENCE PERRUCCIO TO FIVE YEAR TERM

BELOIT ITALIAN CONVICTED OF MURDEROUS ATTACK WILL GO TO PRISON.

OVERCOME BY GRIEF

Judge Grimm Gives Kindly Advice to Defendant—Jury Out Nearly Twenty-Eight Hours.

Joseph Perruccio of Beloit, found guilty late Saturday afternoon of making a murderous assault upon Tony Dragona on October 14, but acquitted of the murder of Alisandro Polachi, was sentenced by Judge George Grimm this afternoon to five years' imprisonment in the state's prison at Waupun.

The verdict of the jury was brought in at about 5:30 o'clock Saturday after they had been out nearly twenty-eight hours. Perruccio received the sentence with great emotion and left the court room with his face flushed and weeping.

Attorney C. D. Rosa of Beloit, who with Attorney T. S. Nolan of this city defended Perruccio, was the only one to respond when Judge Grimm asked before passing sentence, if any of the counsel had suggestions to make. He said that during the time he had been associated with the defendant while preparing his case, he had become convinced of his fundamentally good character.

He had rather have seen him convicted of manslaughter than of the crime of which he was convicted as he had not believed in his own heart that the defendant was guilty of it. Perruccio had already suffered a great deal for what he had done and he was sure he would never repeat the offense.

"When I stop to think over the testimony that has been presented and the circumstances under which you shot two men I sometimes think that Divine Providence is kinder than man. It is only because of the fact that the second man you shot was not killed that you have not been convicted of murder in at least the second degree. As to the actual fact, whether or not you committed murder, no one knows but yourself.

"The jury had its doubts and gave you the benefit of the doubt. You have been ably defended and had as fair a trial as man ever was given. It is through the efforts of your attorneys that sufficient facts were presented to convince the jury that there was a reasonable doubt of your guilt or innocence and you owe them, attorneys and jury, your gratitude.

"Remember that it is a crime to harbor malice and revenge and if you will learn to think kindly thoughts of your fellow men and treat them squarely and honorably they will return like treatment to you."

Perruccio awaited the verdict with some anxiety. He was concerned lest the outcome would be a disagreement and in the court room Saturday afternoon seemed much distressed when it seemed almost inevitable that his case must be tried again.

Perruccio calmly discussed his case at his cell in the county jail on Sunday. He was disappointed, he said, at the jury's verdict. "I am sorry," he continued, "that Polachi is dead, and that I shot him, but I think my act was justifiable and I felt sure that the jury would acquit me of murder."

Asked concerning his cast Perruccio explained it with some hesitation as follows: "If strangers came into your house and took your things, threatening to shoot and then attacked a friend, I can't see how I could do much else. When I saw the man fall my friend I thought sure he had knifed him and I sought to protect myself.

"The papers have told tales of white slaves and heartless murder, but that is untrue. I've tried to live right and I wanted to marry and be happy." Mr. and Mrs. Simone, to whose young daughter Angeline, aged fourteen, Perruccio was engaged to be married as soon as she was old enough, spent yesterday with the convicted man in his jail cell. It was in the Simone store that the shooting occurred. The Simones are very friendly with Perruccio and have stood by him throughout the trial.

Young Perruccio is a nice looking, well appearing young fellow, far beyond the average of the majority of his countrymen who are seen in this section of the country. He speaks English with facility and is bright and intelligent.

The report that he wept after hearing the jury's verdict and refused to eat his supper was denied both by him and by Sheriff Whipple, who declared Perruccio was a model prisoner. "I am ready to take whatever punishment the court may give," said Perruccio. "I am sure Judge Grimm will give me a square deal.

"If the papers say that I didn't eat, they should have seen me pack away that Sunday dinner. I am going to eat enough here to prepare for what may come later," and he lapsed into silence, his smiling face taking on a serious frown.

On other topics he was able to converse freely and showed an interest in the sports of the day and was able to talk intelligently on all the subjects brought into conversation.

FORMER PASTOR GAVE ANNIVERSARY SERMON

Reverend Jenkin Lloyd Jones Pastor in Chicago Church for Thirty-One years on Sunday.

The Reverend Jenkin Lloyd Jones, for many years pastor of All Souls church in Janesville, commemorated the thirty-first year of his pastorship of his appearance in a Chicago pulpit on Sunday. Speaking from the pulpit of All Souls church, Abraham Lincoln center, in the morning, the aged pastor said:

"First, last and all the time during these thirty-one years I have tried to be a minister of religion, which is still to me the highest ministry a man can engage in. For religion, as I have tried to interpret it, is the reconciling force of society, the bond that holds man to man, and man to his duty when all other bonds fail. I have stood for religion that stands for progress, freedom and brotherhood. I have through all these years stood for the application of religion. I have stood for the rights of woman as the equal partner of man. I have stood for the rights of the colored man as eligible to all the privileges of this church and whatever privileges civilization has to give to a soul when it is made worthy by effort, sanity, sobriety and purity.

"I have stood for that communion of religion that refuses to be rimmed by any Christian name or interpretation, Jew, Buddhist, Mohammedan, are all eligible to the fellowship of the church I have tried to build. This church has grown into a 'center' of fellowship and usefulness. We have given it the name of the Great Commoner, Abraham Lincoln, but in its growth it has become more and not less a church. During these thirty-one years it has been my privilege to help shape the great Parliament of Religion, to edit through all these years Unity, which as a messenger of freedom and character in religion, represents as I believe, my greatest service in life."

SPEED FANS ATTEND LOCAL AUTO RACES

High Class Racing Machines Entered in Events at Driving Park This Afternoon.

The automobile races at the driving park this afternoon attracted considerable attention in the city and the drivers promised to make fast time in circling the Janesville track. In practicing this morning, the speedmen said that the track was one of the best mile circular tracks that they had ever performed on.

The biggest of the cars here was a private racer, owned by W. D. Jones, of Fort Atkinson and driven by Garson, who has won considerable fame in the automobile racing world, having defeated the country's stars at Springfield. He is a rising racing pilot. The car is a Stavers-Chicago make and is rated at sixty horse power and can make eighty miles an hour with ease. The Stutz company was represented with a forty-five horse power car patterned after the machine that won the Elgin free-for-al, and which was driven by Gil Anderson at a rate of seventy-one and a half miles per hour. Two Buicks, a Warren-Detroit and a Ford special were the remainder of the cars to clash in the two races for the large purse for first and second place.

The cars were all of a high racing type, having exhaust pipes leading from each cylinder, underslung body, with the wheels set at an angle from the body and extended out from the car so as to diminish the weight upon the tires.

Great Northern Life Enters Local Field

Wausau, Wisconsin, Insurance Company Opens Office in Janesville.

The field superintendent of the Great Northern Life Insurance Company, Orville Brockett, assisted by David M. Pursley, special representative, have opened offices for their company in the Jackman building.

The Great Northern Life makes a specialty of their SELECTED LIVES contract, issued to preferred risks only. By reason of family history mode of life and physical conditions of the applicant, there results a SPECIAL SELECTION in lives, permitting a reduction in premium to the lowest net cost. This is a contract that will pay everyone to look over before placing insurance. It has some very attractive features as well as very liberal loan and cash surrender values.

The Great Northern has already made an excellent showing in this territory through the ability and energy of Mr. Brockett, who has written more than $100,000 in Rock County alone since June 1st of this year. Mr. Brockett ranks as a high man with his compayn.

The directorate of the company is composed of some of the most influential men in the state; Hon. Neal Brown, a lawyer of wide repute, being its president. Others are Hon. C. C. Yawkey, Hon. Alexander Stewart, Hon. S. A. Cook, Hon. Webster E. Brown, Hon. W. H. Mylrea and Hon. Wm. A. Fricke, ex-state insurance commissioner, who is vice president and general manager.

In addition to the efficient management of the company, The Great Northern Life is controlled in Eastern Wisconsin, by General Agent Gustav Schrage of Sheboygan, one of the largest producers in the country. There is a great field here for good insurance and with the Great Northern's low, non-participating rates there is no doubt as to the future for their success. Advertisement.

The Steel Gang

By GEORGE FITCH, Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

WHENEVER a company has decided to build a building that will stick up into the zenith for an eighth of a mile and seriously interfere with a clear view of the dog star from all angles, it sends for the steel gang.

The steel gang is not noted for its beauty. The men have large red hands and prehensile feet, and they do not shave every morning before coming to work. They are usually deficient in education and don't know a logarythm from a beneficient microbe. But in the art of handling trainloads of steel beams and girds and standing them on end they have no rivals.

Most men could help nobly with the steel gang while it was getting the first floor columns for a 54-story zenith stabber. They would ride the steel with glee and shin up a column to the dizzy height of 17 feet without a thought of the awful consequences that would ensue should the earth suddenly come up and attack them from the rear.

But later on the amateur would become pale and thoughtful; and at about the third story he would resign his position, owing to indigestion or illness at home, and climb carefully down holding on to the earth for support after he had gotten there.

Whereupon the steel gang would laugh and the high priest thereof would climb casually to the top of a steel column on the 17th story and stand carelessly scratching his left ear with his right leg while the earth reeled by 200 feet below him.

The life of the steel gang is a happy one and free from care. This is because the members are not interrupted at their work. The toiler who is trying to set a beam on an even keel 450 feet above an unusually hard pavement does not have to stop and entertain a friend who has dropped up to murder a spare half hour. He is not pestered by book agents and the little girl who is getting 1,000,000 subscriptions to a local paper in order to win a Shetland pony looks at him sadly from below and passes by. His life is one round of airy bliss, and when the quitting whistle blows he shins downward with regret. So long as a man is a member in good standing of the steel gang life is sweet to him, and he takes it seasoned with star dust and cloud cocktails. But when he loses his standing the result is most regrettable and his comrades knock off work for the rest of the day and discuss the mysteries of gravitation with hushed and tear-stained voices.

The Evening Chit-Chat

BY RUTH CAMERON

PLEASING THE CONVALESCENT.

IT IS most unpleasant to be very sick. It is sometimes even more unpleasant to get well. Of course, you understand that I refer not to the fact of getting well, but to the process. A convalescent ought to be very grateful and happy, but he is more likely to be unhappy, impatient and very hard to please.

The way to succeed in pleasing the convalescent is to put yourself in his place, try to imagine his limitations, his weakness, and the scarcity of his interests, and then devise something which would please you under similar conditions.

An intelligent visitor suggested that her sick friend's bed be moved close up to her window so that she could look out on the street without lifting her head from the pillow. The bed had previously been so placed that the convalescent could only look out when sitting up, and then on a patch of uneventful garden instead of into the street with its movement and activity.

This convalescent received many gifts of flowers, fruit, magazines, etc., during her illness, but she afterwards declared that none meant so much to her as the gift of the intelligent suggestion. She was too weak to sit up or read much; she could not be constantly attended; and time hung cruelly heavy. To be able by merely turning her head on the pillow to see the simple but interesting drama of the neighborhood life as it was enacted on the street below, was an invaluable diversion.

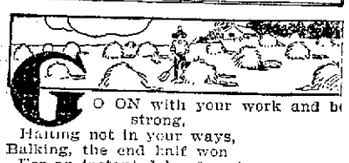

Anything which occupies the convalescent's mind in a pleasant and not too exciting manner is invaluable. Instead of giving an invalid cut flowers, give him a growing plant with plenty of buds and half-open blossoms upon it. In addition to his pleasure in the beauty of the flowers he will also enjoy watching the development of the plant.

When giving books or magazines be sure to pick out those in which the print is course and there are plenty of pictures. When the body is weak, the eyes are likely to be weak also, and much steady reading is usually bad for invalids. A fashion magazine full of beautiful illustrations delighted a sick friend of mine more than any of the other reading matter she received, because it did not tax her eyes to look through it.

A bit of interesting news, an amusing story or a scrap of harmless gossip, often pleases an invalid as much as a material gift, because it gives him something to think about after his visitor has gone. A friend of mine who has had a good deal of experience in sick rooms, and is always a most welcome visitor therein, says that whenever she is going to visit an invalid she makes a point of gathering together all such interesting scraps from the four corners of her mind.

Youth, old age and convalescence are the days of little things. Little things disappoint and little things please. Remember this when you have to deal with a convalescent.

GO ON with your work and be strong,
Hating not in your ways,

SOME GOOD THINGS.

Stir up with a spoon a soft biscuit dough and fill greased muffin pans half full. Make a hollow in the center and fill with a little marmalade or jam. Bake in a quick oven and serve with cream or a liquid sauce, flavored with lemon juice or vinegar. This is a good emergency dessert to keep in mind when there seems nothing to have for dinner.

Spanish Rice.—Fry two large onions in salt pork drippings, then add one pint of tomatoes; when well boiled up add a pint of cooked rice. Set back on the stove to cook slowly, or in the oven for a half hour.

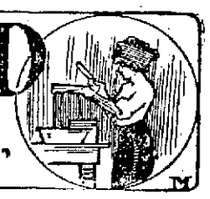

Chili Con Carne.—Boil until tender two cups of the little brown beans. Grind a pound of round steak, put into a saucepan to cook with cold water to cover; add a tablespoonful of butter, as much red pepper as you can endure, and cook an hour and a half. When the beans are tender, add them and cook an hour longer.

Spaghetti.—Fry a clove of garlic in a tablespoonful of olive oil or butter, add two tomatoes, sliced; cook until the tomatoes are smooth and cooked to a pulp. Prepare the spaghetti by boiling in salted water until tender. Drain and add to the tomatoes, well seasoned with salt and red pepper.

Garlic is one of our most wholesome flavor vegetables, but is in disrepute because of the unwholesome manner in which it is used by some. There should be just a suggestion of the flavor, illusive and indefinable, to make a perfectly flavored dish. Garlic is said to help digestion, and preserves one from epidemics and pestilential diseases.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

To remove machine oil from white material, soak the spot in cold water while it is fresh.

Cold slaw served in green pepper shells, makes a dainty dish for luncheon.

Door plates can be cleaned by rubbing with a cloth wet in ammonia and water.

Kerosene will soften boots and shoes that have been hardened by water and make them as pliable as new.

THE TABLE.

French Omelet — Four eggs, four tablespoonfuls of milk, half teaspoonful of butter. Beat eggs slightly, just enough to blend the yolks and whites, add the milk and seasonings. Put the butter in a hot omelet pan; when melted, turn in the mixture; as it cooks, prick and pick up with a fork until the whole is of a creamy consistency. Place on hotter part of the range that it may brown quickly underneath. Fold and turn on a hot platter.

Macaroni Soup — One quart of brown soup stock, one-quarter cup of macaroni broken in half-inch pieces, salt and pepper.

Cook the macaroni in boiling salted water until it is soft. Drain, and add to the stock heated to the boiling-point. Season with salt and pepper.

Baked Mackerel—Split the fish and clean, removing the head and tail. Put the fish in a buttered dripping-pan and sprinkle with salt and pepper, and do over with butter (allowing one tablespoonful to a medium sized fish), and pour over two-thirds of a cup of milk. Bake for twenty-five minutes in a hot oven.

Parisian French Dressing.— Half cup of olive oil, five tablespoonfuls of vinegar, half teaspoonful of powdered sugar, one tablespoonful of finely chopped Bermuda onion, two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped parsley, four red pepper, eight green peppers, one teaspoonful of salt. Mix the ingredients in the order given. Let it stand for one hour, then stir vigorously for five minutes. This is fine with lettuce, chicory, romaine or endive.

Orange Puffs—One-third of a cup of butter, one cup of sugar, two eggs, half of a cup of milk, one and three-fourths cups of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Cream the butter, add the sugar gradually and the eggs well beaten; mix and sift the flour and baking powder; add alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Bake in buttered individual tins. Serve with orange sauce.

Creamed Walnuts — White of one egg, half tablespoonful of cold water, three-fourths of a teaspoonful of vanilla, one pound of confectioner's sugar, English walnuts. Put the egg, water, and vanilla in a bowl, and beat until well blended. Add the sugar gradually until it is stiff enough to knead. Shape into balls, flatten, and place halves of walnuts opposite each other on each piece. Sometimes you will not need all the sugar.

FLAKY PASTRY IS DECLARED REAL ART.

"It may be that life's best cookers
Can invent for the joy of men
Desserts that are finer lookers
Than pie—but once again
Let me say, with heart in the saying,
That I yearn for no place in the sky,
If for working, repenting and praying,
Heaven holds no reward of—pie.
—Forecast.

Surely no one but a man wrote the above, but we are ready to accede that their judgment and taste is good in choosing pie for dessert, providing it is the kind of pie which is made from a pure vegetable fat and good material is put between this vegetable fat pastry.

Every woman who does her cooking should know how to make nice flaky pastry. She can make enough for two or three days and keep it in the refrigerator ready for use at any time.

Pies are not the only desserts which can be made from pastry, and if good plain paste is once accomplished, then it is only a step higher in making puff paste, which delights any housekeeper when she succeeds in making it light and flaky. It may be used in patty shells, lady locks and turnovers. The plain pastry makes dainty tarts, turnovers, meat patties, fish patties and case of apple tart pies, lemon and many other pies of like nature.

Cranberry Pie.

Materials—Cranberries, one cup; seeded raisins, half cup; sugar; three-quarters cup; egg, one; flour, one tablespoonful; lemon juice, one tablespoonful.

Directions — Cut the cranberries and raisins in halves before measuring; mix well with all the remaining ingredients and bake between two crusts for a pie or turnover. They may also be baked in patty pans with fancy twisted strips of the pastry over the top.

Orange Filling for Pies and Tarts.

Material—Sugar, one cup; orange juice, half cup; flour, three tablespoonfuls; lemon juice, one tablespoonful; butter, one tablespoonful; orange, one; eggs, two; pastry (plain).

Directions—Cover an inverted pie pan or patty pans with a good, plain pastry, pricking it well with a fork. Bake a delicate brown. Put the sugar and flour, well mixed, into the double boiler. Add the grated rind of the orange, lemon and orange juice, and the eggs lightly beaten. Stir over the fire until it begins to thicken and stir occasionally in the double boiler while it cooks about 15 minutes. Add the butter and cool a little. Fill the baked pastry and cover with a meringue made from the whites of two eggs, beaten stiff, and two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar added, and beat again. Flavor with one teaspoonful of vanilla, and bake in a slow oven until the meringue is well puffed and a bright brown. Half of the same filling is fine for layer cakes.

Old Custom Survives.

The ancient custom "horn dancing" took place at Abbot Bromley, Burton-on-Trent, England, recently, when costumed dancers carrying reindeer horns which have been stored in the church for four centuries, and astride hobby-horses, went through the countryside to the strains of rag-time music.

Anti-Puritan Club.

Quite a long list could be drawn up of clubs which have come into being as the result of a quarrel with some other club. The latest is the "Next Door," in Whitehall, London. It grew out of the refusal of the committee of the National Liberal to allow auction bridge to be played. So many members demanded auction that some of them engaged premises next door, in which they could indulge in their favorite game.

Daily Thought.

He that judges without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss.—Locke.

HEART and HOME PROBLEMS

BY MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) Will blue be very stylish this winter? If not, what colors will?

(2) Are the cutaway long coats going to be stylish this winter and will they be worn shorter than the dresses?

(3) Will beaver hats be stylish this winter and what shapes will be worn; also what colors?

(4) Are the small white hats going to be popular long?

(5) Are the draped dresses going to be stylish this winter and are the skirts still going to be tight or will they be looser?

(6) Will chinchilla coats be stylish this winter? A READER.

(1) Blue is always in fashion. The newest shade is geranium. Brown and red will be popular.

(2) Cutaway coats will be worn; some of them full length, some three-quarters.

(3) Yes; rather small; mostly black.

(4) No.

(5) Draped skirts are still the mode, very tight about the ankles and wide through the hips.

(6) Yes.

For "Unhappy and Forsaken"—You must live for your children and do your full duty to them. For their sakes you must forget your sin and put the man out of your thoughts. If possible, move to some other city where you can earn a living for yourself and the children. You cannot do anything to this man. His people would probably not believe you if you told them the truth. All that a woman in your case can do is to keep silent and go as far away as possible. You are probably not the first he has treated so, but if the world knew his record it would only turn away from the women and not from the man. That is the trouble with our society—one moral code for the woman and one for the man. I doubt if most people would sympathize with you if your story were known, though I think I can realize your temptation at the time.

Brace up for your children's sake. You are not living for yourself alone. Always remember that. And if temptation comes to you again, let this experience keep you strong to do right.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) Will vaseline hurt the eyes in case some should get in when putting on eyebrows?

(2) How long will it take eyebrows to grow if you put vaseline on them, if you have scarcely any? Would you consider a person fleshy that wears No. 20 corset and weighs between 118 and 120 pounds?

(3) Most all of my hair is split. Do you think salt water will hurt the hair if I put it on the scalp?

ANXIOUS LOUISE.

(1) Yes.

(2) It will take some time. You can darken your eyebrows with the burned end of a match; but be careful not to make them too dark, or they may give your face a hard look.

(3) Braid the hair tightly, then singe the hairs that stick out with a hot iron. If your hair is dry, do not put salt water on the scalp. Rub a little castor oil or vaseline into the scalp.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am in love with a young man who is lovely in every way, only he goes to sleep every time he comes to call on me. Sometimes when he is saying "good night" he goes to sleep when standing at the door. I cannot see why, as I am a good talker and try to be interesting. He will even go to sleep when I sing.

What would you advise me to do?

PERPLEXED MAIDEN.

I am not surprised that you are perplexed, my dear. It must be rather tiresome to entertain such a sleepy person. Perhaps he stays up too late nights. You might suggest to him that he go to bed earlier and don't keep him so late at your home. He may work very hard during the day and so be sleepy when he calls on you. Also, he may not be well. Just talk to him about it and find out what the trouble is; then try to help him, or bear with him.

PRETTY COAT OF SCOTCH PLAID

This pretty coat is made of Scotch plaid in dark blue and green. The belt of black leather passes through the front and under-tabs at each side and at the back. Shiny black buttons fasten the coat up on the chest and below the waist. The sleeves are set in raglan fashion, and the collar is made of heavy white wool.

Every Day Talks for Every Day People

By FRANCES JOYCE KENNEDY.

Perhaps you know, perhaps you don't: That when putting away a silk parasol for the winter, if you stuff it well with soft tissue paper it will prevent the creases that cause the silk to split.

That a few drops of ammonia in the water in which silver is washed will keep it bright for a long time, without cleaning. This is an especially good plan for plated ware as frequent rubbings wear off the plate.

That to prevent milk from burning, or foods cooked in milk, rinse the stew-pan out with cold water and rub well with a little butter or lard.

That you can preserve the rubbers of your fruit cans or any rubber goods by covering with dry flour. When wanted for use remove the flour with a dry cloth and the rubber will be as soft and pliable as when first purchased.

That if by chance your vegetables scorch or burn while cooking if they are taken instantly from the stove and set in a pan of cold water for about ten minutes the scorched taste will have vanished.

That to toughen glassware or lamp-chimneys fill a pot with cold water to which has been added plenty of common salt. Put in the glassware, boil well; then cool slowly. Such glass will resist any sudden change of temperature. Glasses treated in this manner will stand the well-meant but often rather careless handling of the children far better than glasses that have not been given this treatment.

That you can purchase a dish-pan that is of oblong shape, that fits in your kitchen sink and that is partitioned making a rinsing pan unnecessary. These can be purchased in your own town and are but a wee bit dearer than the older kind and they are far superior.

That if you put a small pinch of baking soda in the gooseberries or cranberries while cooking, less sugar will be required to sweeten them.

That a few drops of lavender scattered through a bookcase in a closed room will save a library from mold in damp weather.

That hardened lemons will regain their original freshness if soaked in hot water.

That to hold a rug in place in the middle of the room, still having it so it may be easily taken up to clean, drive brass-headed nails into the floor at each corner and midway between. Then sew brass rings on the rug to hook over these when put in place.

That fish odor can be easily removed from silver knives, forks or cooking utensils by letting them stand in cold water before washing.

SERMON ON SUNDAY BY VISITING PASTOR

Rev. J. F. Robinson Gives Address at Morning Service at Methodist Church.

Taking for his sermon the ninth verse of chapter fourteen of St. John, Rev. J. F. Robinson of Walla Walla, Washington, who is visiting in the city, delivered a worthy sermon at the Cargill Memorial Methodist church Sunday morning.

"We find that the disciples had questioned Christ in a conference how they were to know God, to know the Father, so that when they were sent out into the world to teach the truth, to be comforted in traveling over the hills of life by a direct knowledge of Him that they had never seen or heard. When questioned by Disciple Phillip Christ said, 'Have I been so long with you and yet thou has not known me, Phillip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? Believest thou that I am not in the Father and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but of the Father that, swelleth in me, he doeth the works.'

"In other words Christ said, "Knew me, know the Father.' This satisfied the disciples for Christ was going away and he had become their Father and was indispensable to them and the Master, knowing their attitude, turned and said. 'Do not be troubled for I will return again.' If we believe in Christ, the son of God, we know God and if we follow his commandments and laws, we are following the work of Him above, for Christ and God are one. The disciples accepted His answer that in Christ was the spirit of God and as they were acquainted with him, they felt acquainted with His Father.

"Is it possible that God be revealed to us? He is in a way unknown to us children of the day and it is impossible for the Finite to see the Infinite. Space is unlimited, the earth beneath is infinite practically speaking and the same is true of duration and time, but even they appear without limit we can measure and understand them. A child's love for his mother he does not comprehend. He knows that she will sacrifice anything for his pleasure but does not really understand how deeply it penetrates and how no measure can weigh it, but knows it exists. It is the same with God, if we know Christ by his medium, the Bible we know God and rejoice in his blessings. We know that the heart of a true follower of the teachings has his heart satisfied, but still the how, when and why go unquestioned. Ask God for our heart wants and we are answered. We should know him in his beauty and glory in his majesty. The thirst and hunger of the disciples for his loves was satisfied by Christ and we should profit by it."

"Some say Nature morally is a proof of his love but it does not teach his depest truth and does not touch his foundations. God is in the flowers, birds, they bloom and are beautiful and everything is happy because of his spirit, we say. How about the Arctic region where the cold bleak regions know no sunshine or nature except vast length of ice and storm wrath, ocean or the barren deserts when the hot sun scorches all signs of life. The beauty of the valleys are lacking, but God is there; God is to be known, not by nature alone, for his love extends from the richest to the humblest homes and lands.

"How does this knowledge come in the Arctic or deserts. To know him is comfort and to the lonely it reaches deep and steadfast. Even the children who are unable to read the work of God and Christ, receive his love and whether we are in the valleys or on the mountains, in trouble or happiness, his love brings joy.

"Is there eternal life If we know him, we are certain of life after death. His love breaks the bars of sin and leads the fallen man back into the paths of liberty and joy.

"God made salvation to save us, to give us refuge, strength, as the lonely Pilgrim, foot-sore and weary, is happy with the teaching of eternal happiness, though his life from appearance is blank.

"Do you know him? Have you heard his comforting promises and had Him revealed by learning Christ. The way is open to the Saviour and he will bid you welcome on the shores beyond the river. God is life, open your eyes, and hearts and see him and rejoice."

On the Spur of the Moment

The College Goat.

They laid him on his manly back
and tied him to the railroad track,
And told him it was most time for the train.
He sobbed aloud in keenest grief, because it was his firm belief
He'd never see his fond mamma again.
They rescued him in nick of time
and then to cover up the crime
They dropped him in a well and let him soak.
They took him in an hour or two and pounded him all black and blue,
And hanled him from a bridge, just for a joke.

And then in manner coarse and rude, they took his clothes and left him nude,
And made him run for home with all his might;
But caught him e'er he had gone far and daubed him up with lukewarm tar
And feathers until he was a lurid sight.
They made him climb a dozen trees and shiver in the autumn breeze,
And rode him on a rail for half an hour.
He barked his shins and skinned his nose and lost nine pounds of adipose,
While climbing up the bellrope in the tower.

And then they thought it would be nice to tie him to some cakes of ice,
And float him down the river o'er the dam.
They hanged him up then by the heels and gloried in his frightened squeals,
And painted him with huckleberry jam.
They made him dance on red-hot bricks and sing a song and do some tricks,
And climb a greased pole sixty-five feet tall,
The reason is not hard to see. The secret of it was that he
Was joining a fraternity, that's all.

New York Notes

In some of the large office buildings here they have revolving doors that operate by motive power. They keep right on going around and you have got to jump in and out at just the psychological moment.. When you are inside of the thing you must keep on a sort of a dog trot. I was inside of one of the big insurance buildings and wanted to get out. A vacant section of the door came around and I jumped into it. Every time I tried to jump out into the street I jumped just about four seconds too late and landed back in the building. This continued for some time and upon the occasion of one of my flights into the building the policeman on duty there asked me if I was just moving around for pleasure or was I training for a cross country Marathon. There was one little old gentleman in the revolving door who was trying to get into the building, but each time he would jump out into the street. Finally he gave up in despair and ran around and around with no attempt to get out at all. I was told that the machinery stopped at 6 o'clock and they probably rescued him at that time.

If a person likes to travel, but doesn't have any place in particular to go he can do no better than to jump into one of thes revolving doors that run by electric power. One of these compartment doors will accommodatee four persons at a time and with the old gentleman and myself running around in it all the afternoon the flow of travel by that particular door was reduced about 50 per cent. For a person who wants to do lots of running around while in New York, these doors solve the proilem.

A slicker from down to the city was through our town last week and put Coustable Ezra Hand down for some accident insurance. It is impossible to see what in tophet the constable wants of accident insurance, as he ain't ever around when anything happens, either by accident or premditation.

COLLEGE COMEDY IS GIVEN BY STUDENTS

"The Sophomore" Rendered by Students of Milton High School Under Direction of Miss Roy.

Milton, Nov. 3.—The Milton high school gave a very interesting college comedy Thursday evening, Oct. 30, entitled "The Sophomore," before a large and appreciative audience. The play was a success in every respect, and the ability shown by some of the students who took part was a pleasing surprise to many of those present.

The parts had been wisely chosen and carefully coached by Miss Roy, teacher of English, and no small amount of credit is due to her untiring efforts.

The leading character, "The Sophomore," was creditably carried out by Lto Lanphere. Miss Mamie Gunderson made a decided hit as "Hope Alden, as "Stuttering Buster Brown," "Prof. Alden," her father, an absent-mindtd old physics teacher, was strikingly impersonated by Elmer Rumpf. "Aunt Mary Scott" and "Cousin Matilda Dwiggins," two old maid aunts, were very cleverly carried out by Beth Bingham and Eva Gurley, while Ruth Bingham, as "Violet," the maid, drew many a laugh from the audience.

The parts of "Bud Kennedy," captain of the football team, "Coach Livingston," "Kirk Bannister," special chum of "The Sophomore," were well taken by Arthur Curtis, Fred Crumb and Paul Randolph, while Clarke Borden, as "Stuttering Busttr Brown," threw the audience into convulsions of laughter every time he appeared on the stagt.

The other characters were also pleasingly represented by those shown in the program below. The high school orchestra furnished appropriate music. The proceeds from the play go to the Athletic Association fund. Program of play:

A PAROLED WAUKESHA YOUTH IS ARRESTED

Applied for Lodging at Police Station Saturday Night—Had Robbed Farmer He Had Been Working For.

Saturday evening a young man giving his name as Fred S. Sparas, age twenty years, applied at the Janesville police station for a night's lodging, stating that he was broke and was going to work at the sugar beet factory Monday morning. He gave his home as Chicago.

Sunday morning the police received word that the young man in question was a paroled prisoner from the state reform school at Waukesha and had been sent to work under Howard McMan on a farm between Elkhorn and Delavan. Last week McMan missed his razor and a valuable watch, and he at once accused Sparas of being the thief. After a heated argument the young man admitted stealing the property and returned the watch and razor.

McMan in his rage, is alleged to have given Sparas physical punishment and handing him a dollar and a half and told him to get off the place. Sparas made his way to Janesville and Sunday morning admitted being a Waukesha prisoner and gave a detailed account of his parolement.

At the station he was searched and the authorities found an old relic revolver that contained several shells, one of which was loaded. Sparas stated that he had found the gun at the Northwestern station, but later said he bought it at a second hand store on South Main street. The police are inclined to doubt both explanations as the gun is at least forty years old, being one of the first twenty-two calibers manufactured. It is known as an old square seven shooter or "pop" gun.

The weapon created great amusement to the police because of its small caliber and antique qualities. One of the officers ventured to wager that the weapon cost twenty-five dollars when new, as the silver side plates are engraved and was one of the first seven shooters on the market. The grip is curved and the hammer is as large as the modern forty-fives are equipped with.

The young man has been sent to Waukesha from Medford, Wisconsin, by his foster parents, from whom he had run away. From the reformatory he was paroled to his foster parents, but refused to work for them and went back to Waukesha. From there he was sent to a farmer in Taylor county until he was sent back and paroled to McMan at Avalon. An official came this morning to take him to Waukesha to serve the remainder of his time, which is only a few months.

CHILDREN HATE OIL, CALOMEL AND PILLS

"California Syrup of Figs" best for tender stomach, liver, bowels —tastes delicious.

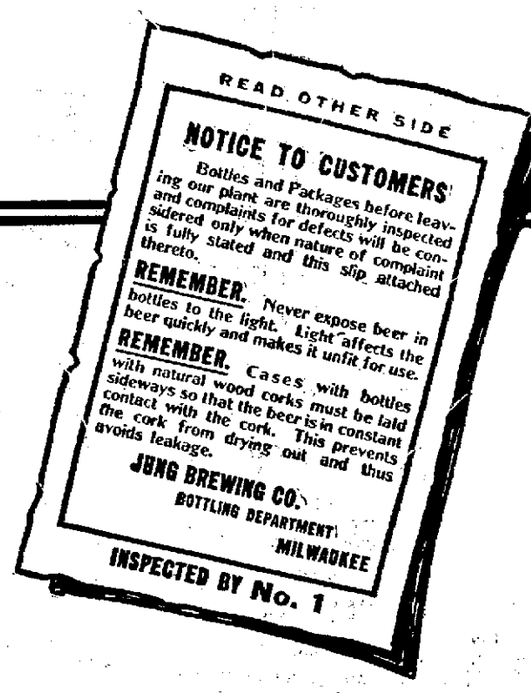

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on — castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. See that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

UNCLE WALT

The Poet Philosopher

Copyright, 1909, by George Matthew Adams

BY WALT MASON

When Britain sends her gifted bards to visit "Yankee" shores, we take them warmly to our breasts, e'en though we find them bores; we compliment their blooming lyres, we boost their blawsted song, and when they leave our bloody land they take our praise along. We feed them at our groaning board, as though they might be earls, and introduce them to our aunts and all the spinster girls; we try to make them feel that British and Americans are brothers, true as steel. But when we sent to England's shore a bard without a lid, it was a burning, screaming shame, the things those Britons did. They didn't take him to their homes or to the banquet hall, they didn't hang his picture where it might be seen by all; they didn't drink the poet's health in brown October ale; they grabbed him where his clothes were slack and fired him into jail. A blooming jurist sized him up and muttered to the bard: "You'll 'ave to 'ump yourself in 'ock—three weeks of labor 'ard!" And when your bloody term is 'up we'll ship you from this shore, and don't come 'ustling 'ere again, or you will get some more!" And shall the Eagle now submit, or claw the Lion's tail? How can we boast about our flag while Harry Kemp's in jail?

ORFORDVILLE

Orfordville, Nov. 3.—Principal Harrup and family went to Whitewater on Friday evening to visit with relatives there.

Brittingham & Hixon Lumber company have their office moved onto the new foundation and are planning to get the large scales in as soon as possible.

Hallowe'en passed off very quietly in the village, no pranks being committed. This does not indicate that the boys of Orfordville are less given to this line of behavior than in other towns, but rather that the vigilant eye of the Marshall and the austere frown of the police justice exercised a soothing effect on the rising generation.

The "Needlecraft" of the Lutheran church met with Miss Gena Stuvengen on Saturday afternoon. There was a good attendance and an enjoyable time.

Mrs. N. N. Tollefsrud, who went to Mercy hospital and underwent an operation for appendicitis, returned home on Saturday morning.

Miss Marion Howe entertained a company of her girl friends at a Hallowe'en party on Friday evening. The usual Hallowe'en stunts were indulged in and a general good time is reported.

The new crossing just west of the depot was opened for travel on Friday. There was strife among drivers as to who should have the honor of being the first to cross.

A. G. Hayerdahl and Oliver Clemetson left for the north on Monday and will spend some time in quest of deer or other large game. They will be located near Grand View, and expect to go into camp with Torris Everson, who has been there for several weeks.

KEEP LOOKING YOUNG

It's Easy—If You Know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

The secret of keeping young—is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle.

Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver. Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, are gentle in their action, yet always effective. They bring about that exuberance of spirit, that natural buoyancy which should be enjoyed by everyone, by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities. You will know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets by their olive color. 10c and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, Ohio.

FRAIL, WEAKLY CHILD

Made Strong by Vinol.

So many cases like this are coming to our attention for the benefit of fathers and mothers of weak, sickly, ailing children in this vicinity we publish the following letter:

Mrs. J. P. Weatherford, Litchfield, Ill., says: "We have had an invalid child for the past nine years and until we began using Vinol, we sometimes thought there was little hope for him. He would have terrible coughing spells at night, and they would leave him so exhausted. We tried everything, but to no avail. At last some one suggested that we try Vinol, and we noticed a change in him from the very first. The coughing spells ceased and he gained in strength right along. We would not be without it and would advise parents who have frail and weakly children to try Vinol."

This is because the child needed the strengthening cod liver elements and the tonic iron that Vinol contains. No oil, delicious taste. Children love it. We give back your money if Vinol does not benefit. Smith Drug Co., Druggists, Janesville, Wis.

HOLTON of THE NAVY

A Story of the Freeing of Cuba

CHAPTER XI.

A Close Call.

Holton's first instinct was to utter the girl's name; but flashing second thought came to his rescue, and he broke into a volley of Spanish ejaculations. As he went on she stood regarding him fixedly, and finally, seeing a peculiar expression settle upon her wonderful face, he paused.

"Mr. Holton!" Her voice was low, almost guttural.

Holton sprang toward her.

"Miss La Tossa—Ranee!" His voice, too, was low, quivering with emotion.

She stepped back, and, pointing her finger at him, repeated with blazing eyes her first question.

"What are you doing here?" Then she stopped and looked at him. "Do you realize what you have done?"

She reached up hastily and extinguished the lamp she had lighted.

"Mr. Holton," she continued, as the young officer stood silently regarding her, "have you truly no desire to live?"

"I was captured in the battle," replied Holton. "I escaped and—and—"

"How—why did you come in here?"

"Because a soldier on the road—I mean a farmer—a planter—told me this was your home."

"And you wish me to hide you?"

"No, I wish to leave."

"But you cannot."

"I came in here; I am able to leave."

"No, you are not," she whispered. "General Toral's and Admiral Cervera's escort are outside now." She peered out of the window. "I can see them."

"Well, Sir, What Are You Doing Here?"

Holton looked for himself, and saw the front of the house lined with mounted men. He faced her irresolutely.

"But I must get away at once," he remonstrated. "I cannot stay here."

"Then why did you come here? How did you get in?"

"I wanted to see you," replied Holton. "The door was open, and I walked in."

She looked at him a moment doubtfully. Then she shook her head.

"That was not why you came here. You did not come here to see me."

"But, nevertheless, I wanted to see you."

She went on as though he had not spoken.

"It is quite clear now." She was about to continue, when steps were heard in the hall and a voice called her name:

"Ranee! Ranee, my daughter!"

She pushed Holton into the folds of a heavy tapestry by the door, and then looked out into the hall.

"Yes, father. Here I am."

"Oh, yes! I wish you would ask Maria to prepare a guest-room for Senor Cesnola. He decides to remain the night with us."

"Yes, father," and with a warning "S-sh!" Miss La Tossa went out into the hall and disappeared.

The two men stood near the door, chatting.

"My daughter," complained La Tossa, "is still very restive. She escaped from us the day before the battle on horseback, and was gone the entire day."

"It is just as well," was the laughing reply. "She will do no harm now, for, while your daughter counts on the mine exploding after they have vanquished us, I can assure you that the fuse will be lighted a great while before that rather visionary event."

"You told me that young naval officer who was with Garcia had been executed," went on La Tossa. "I am rather sorry for that. He was a likable young man apparently."

"You need spare your grief," was the rejoinder. "When I so informed you I believed my orders had been carried out. But, as it appears, he escaped."

"Your orders!" ejaculated La Tossa. "And when have you assumed the prerogatives of life and death?"

"Spies must assume such prerogatives occasionally," was the quiet reply. "This young man Holton was in a position to undo my work. He was in my way. As a consequence, I forged Muller's name to a warrant for his execution. That fact may wound your sensibilities; but this is war, not child's play."

Holton's eyes fairly glared through the darkness, and yet, despite his anger, he was pleased to know that the murderous order was the work of a renegade and that it had not the sanction of authority.

"Well, I must say I am glad he was not executed," remarked La Tossa. "My daughter"—his voice sank low—"is, I believe, very fond of him."

"And you approve?"

"Oh, it has not gone so far as that! But I do know that in some way her little secret amour has exerted upon her a repressing influence, has caused her to mope and to brood—in other words, to curb activities which formerly caused me much worry."

Miss La Tossa appeared at the moment, and the two men rejoined their comrades in the opposite room.

"Are you here?" she whispered.

"Yes." Holton stepped before her. "Now listen, Miss La Tossa, I have something I wish to tell you. When I met you before I was unable to reassure your fears as to your country. Now I am. I have spent seven days among the leaders of our army, and I know their intentions. I wish to assure you as a man of honor that as soon as Santiago is taken, as soon as the city and the province are utterly rid of the Spaniards, and as soon as order is restored here, our troops are going to withdraw."

"Is this true?" she whispered tensely.

"It is true, and more. I heard Admiral Sampson and several high army officers assure General Garcia that as soon as practicable the Americans would withdraw, leaving him, General Garcia, as governor of the province. Now, there is no doubt of this at all. I have heard it with my own ears—" He paused and held out his hand. "Are we friends?" he added.

She met his hand impulsively.

"Yes, a thousand times, and God bless you Americans!"

Holton drew her fingers to his lips and kissed them. As he bent thus a figure darkened the doorway and a sneering voice broke the silence.

"A very charming picture, indeed!"

Holton swung around quickly, and before him, his face writhing with a saturnine grin, stood Cesnola. Holton's hand flew to his revolver, but the face and a significant flash of steel on a line with the man's waist gave him pause.

"I know, I know," he laughed, "but just the same, I think you had better leave the weapon in its holster. For I have—what do you Americans say?—ah, the drop on you!"

The girl stamped her foot.

"Senor Cesnola, I command you to leave us; you are a guest here."

"I shall not leave you. On the contrary, I must ask you to slip that revolver from your friend's belt." He stopped, as though struck with a thought. "But you need not mind. I suggest merely that you quit the room; there is about to be an execution."

Holton stood facing the man, immovable as a statue. The girl stepped forward.

"You are lying!" she cried. "There will be no execution."

"Oh, but yes, there will be!" was the smiling rejoinder, "and right before your eyes unless you retire."

"You fiend!" With a sudden, lithe movement she sprang in front of Holton. "Now fire, if you dare!"

Holton placed his hands upon her supple waist and lifted her to one side. The revolver darted forward to aim. The girl uttered a little cry and sprang back, seizing the American's coat with her hands stretched behind her.

"Miss La Tossa!" cried Holton. "You—you—"

Cesnola's face was working with the rage of a fanatic.

"Out of the way, girl!" he cried, glancing behind him at the door of the opposite room, which he had closed as he left it. "That man is a spy! He has got to die! He is an enemy, a snake in the grass, not worthy of a minute's quarter!"

Miss La Tossa never moved; and Holton, his mind working like lightning, did not attempt to put her aside.

"Out of the way," repeated the Spaniard, with a sort of hissing of the breath. "Out of the way, or, by God! I'll shoot through you."

There was the crash of an opening door.

"What's this—this noise and shouting?" came a deep voice.

Holton, watching his enemy like a hawk, saw the revolver-barrel deflected from him, the man's head turned in the direction whence the voice had come. Springing backward and sidewise like a deer, Holton shot across the room.

There was a loud report—a bullet singed his hair. The next instant he had leaped through the window, glass and all, and was on the porch. From here, as two bullets sped after him, he leaped down upon the back of a horse that was being held by a soldier. Striking the animal with the butt of his revolver, he went careering off through the darkness like a rocket.

From the men on the drive, from men on the porch, came a rain of bullets; and Holton, who had learned a trick or two in the way of horsemanship, slipped down along the animal's body, shielding himself almost completely. But the horse was exposed, and a whining bullet pierced the steed to the heart. He suddenly plunged forward, throwing Holton to the ground, then rolled over and was still.

Holton landed on his knees, and, although jarred, was not stunned. He scrambled along desperately, regaining his feet, and struck out for the woods, about a hundred feet away.

He toiled on for two hours, distancing all sounds of pursuit, and then flung himself on the wet ground like a tired animal and fell at once into a deep sleep. When he awoke the sun was shining through the trees.

But it was not this that had roused him. It was the roaring of field ordnance and the racketing of small arms. Evidently they were at it again. His one thought was that this was the 2nd of July, and that on the morrow the Spanish warships meant to dash out of the harbor and attempt an escape.

His fleet must be warned. That was what he was there for, and this, from now on, must be the single aim of his life, the one thought in his mind, the supreme struggle of his body.

By constant concentration upon the object of his mission, he brought his mental condition into a sort of hysteria. The heat, too, had got into his brain. As he stumbled over a log he would sob or curse, and once, when he tripped and was thrown flat, he lay for a second, weeping like a child.

So he went on until once, upon climbing a tree to ascertain his position, he looked down upon the upper waters of the harbor. He was on the hills to the right, and another hour's journey would bring him within signal of his fleet.

He struggled feebly, and then lay back with the realization that, great as was the exigency, he was not able to meet it. A sort of stupor, partly hunger, partly fatigue, stole over him, and he closed his eyes.

It was night when he opened them again, starlit night. At first he could not recall where he was. Then he remembered, and with a start remembered why he was there.

He sat up and with difficulty got on his feet. Then he walked. He did not know he was walking; he had no consciousness of moving, and no sense of direction; but his subconscious powers were leading him right. A breath of pure salt air blew on his face. He turned toward a line of brush and parted it, and there, below him, lay the Spanish fleet, their lights, reflected in the velvet waters, twinkling and winking. He heard the chug-chug of a steam launch, and several times the murmur of a voice rose to his ears.

Farther down, in the moonlight, he could see the masts and funnel of Hobson's Merrimac. Ships' bells struck as he looked, and the sound floated sweetly to the hilltops.

He turned his face seaward and walked along, partially revivified by his rest. At length a sense of openness came upon him, the sensation of a vast void in front of him. He paused, and then stole noiselessly onward, until at last, passing through a growth of manigut, the wide expanse of the Caribbean lay before him.

Here he flung himself on the ground and waited for morning. His limbs were aching with almost unbearable pain. His eyes burned with fever, his head throbbed. And yet all these things he regarded lightly, for the Caribbean was in front of him, and the American fleet would receive his warning as soon as God brought the dawn.

Dinner Stories

Two men were on an expedition to the colonel's hen roost one dark night. Mose had planted the ladder, climbing up to where the chickens were roosting, and was passing them down to Ephraim, who put them in a

bag. Suddenly Mose stopped. "What's de mattah, Brudder Mose?" inquired Ephraim anxiously. "I's just been thinkin', Brudder Ephraim, how me and you is membahs ub de church, an' wedder it's right to take de cunnel's chicklings." "Brudder Mose," said Ephraim, "dat am a great moral question which you an' me aint fit ter wrastle wid. Pass down anudder chicking."

There was "standing room only" in the street car, and the two young women peered in vain for a seat.

"Just watch me get one," the prettier of the two whispered.

She approached a "tired business man," whose nose was in his paper.

"Why, Mr. Smith, how do you do? You're quite a stranger. Will I accept your seat? Oh, thank you so much."

With a malicious smile the man arose and doffed his hat.

"Sit down, Nora, my girl," he said. "Have you been ill? I notice you didnt call for our wash this week!"

And "Nora" crimsoned while the car tittered.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Persons Answering Fraudulent Advertisements Asked to Notify Gazette.

The Gazette is desirous of keeping out of its columns fraudulent advertising and asks the assistance of its patrons to that end.

There are any number of concerns in the country who make a living through a nicely worded advertisement, offering golden opportunities, and these unscrupulous people find fertile ground for work among the masses.

Many orders are received in the Gazette mail for advertising which are returned as objectionable and where there is a queston as to the quailfications the advertisement is omitted. All newspapers have this experience.

But even with the utmost care there will be an occasional advertisement which will pass the scrutiny of the business department of the paper and find its way into the columns.

The Gazette will deem it a favor if you will report to the office any trouble which may have been experienced through the answering of such an advertisement.
